Unchanging Mountains. Turmoil and Upheaval. Dictator in Prussia. Bolivia Wants War.

—By Arthur Brisbane—

BELLEAIR MOUNTAIN, Catskills, N. Y., July 21—We know theoretically that everything in the universe is changing and must some day disappear like the fabric of a dream. The Presidents of today, of 100 years ago, and one thousand years hence will be forgotten, the "great battles of the world" will be as unimportant as so many fights among wolves.

Jeans tells you that our sun throws its substance out into space at the rate of two hundred and fifty million tons a minute. Four minutes hence, when you reach the bottom of this column, the sun will weigh one thousand million tons less than it did when you began to read. He proves it, and proves, also, fortunately, that the sun has done this for hundreds of millions of years, can keep it up for more hundreds of millions of years, supplying heat and light in which we may struggle on toward civilization.

But ultimately all must pass away. The sun and the planets, including this little earth, will be dark and cold, waiting for cosmic processes to reconstruct them, usefully, elsewhere in space.

THEORETICALLY nothing lasts, and nothing seems worth while. But theory loses importance when you return to the mountains after a year's absence. You observe no change, no crumbling of the universe among the stone hills, with their veneer of green trees and their roof of blue sky.

Each mountain stands where it did, each tree, nearby, and the indistinct rows of trees outlined against the clouds, along mountain slopes, far away, keep their positions. The sun goes down, leaving its last light on the same peak. The star that follows the sun appears in the same place at the appointed hour, and the big Dipper's rim points, as usual, to the North Pole, fixed and unchangeable.

You know that many stars in turn become the North Star, as our North Pole swings around the circle, in less than twenty thousand years.

But it all seems permanent, in the mountains. No change, except that slowly-growing trees cut off, each year, a little of the lower horizon.

From the world beyond the peaceful mountains comes news of turmoil, the most important news from Berlin.

The solemn German, who thought all the exciting news must be "out," by this time, found his city, at 11 yesterday morning, decorated with placards announcing the appointment of a dictator to rule in Prussia with absolute authority, threatening punishment for refusing to obey the dictator or tampering with placards.

Von Hindenburg, president of the German republic, had appointed as Dictator Von Papen, strong in the confidence of the German people. The Prussian cabinet, denying Von Hindenburg's power in the matter, is sent about its business.

For a while, one man's will is to replace the effort of the Germans to govern themselves by Republican methods. The Hohenzollern monarchy led to disaster and failure. The republic, after long success, under difficulties never before known, confesses failure, temporarily. The reason given for this change is the inability of Prussia's cabinet to maintain order, and its too great sympathy with Communistic elements.

The dictatorship does not extend beyond the Prussian borders, but it covers two-thirds of Germany's territory.

The real dictator, Mussolini, keeps his machinery in order. Yesterday he dismissed 16 members of his cabinet, taking two more important offices on his own shoulders. Responsibility does not worry HIM.

Wherever you look on this rolling earth, trouble meets your eye. Japan is rushing another army to fight the Chinese in Jehol, and financial ruin threatens much of Japan.

Troops from Paraguay have beaten troops of Bolivia in a two-day battle, and Bolivia's people insist on a regular, genuine war with Paraguay. If they consulted a few European nations, they might not be so eager for war.

We have our own usual worries. A radical leader in Washington's bonus army is arrested. He promoted a demonstration toward the White House.

Wheat and cotton both declined Tuesday, the wheat asking for new low prices. That news is as bad for the Republican party as it is for farmers.

There is one little bright spot in Wall Street's gloomy canyon. Street car stocks, surface, subway and in the air, are stronger. The public is expected to take over the New York city companies, to the tune of hundreds of millions, and that comforts

Federal Buildings Also Cleared as 4000 Marchers Apply for Fare to Homes

Washington, July 21—The Treasury Department today issued orders for the evacuation of all government buildings along Pennsylvania ave. occupied by the bonus army.

The order also instructed the police to clear out adjoining vacant lots where the men have built crude shelters of various sorts.

Pelham D. Glassford, superintendent of police, made plans for the evacuation later today.

At the veterans' administration members of the bonus army continued to seek transportation home. At 9 o'clock this morning railroad tickets or all-and gas had been furnished to slightly over 4000.

ROBERTSON QUITS

Roy W. Robertson, leader of the Chicago contingent, indicated today he would lead his men out of Washington within the next 48 hours.

He said he did not intend to take advantage of the transportation offered through the veterans' administration but "would leave the way we came, on freight trains."

BATTLE OVER FOOD

Meanwhile the veterans had a battle of their own over who should have the food. Walter W. Waters, commander-in-chief, had charge of the commissary and issued orders no supplies should be issued to Robertson's men or to the "radicals" led by Pace.

Pace and two of his aides awaited trial on charges of parading without a permit as a result of their attempted march on the White House yesterday. The President's home is still under heavy guard.

Bruening Defends the Ousted Prussians; Hitler Is Elated by Von Papen's Drive

Berlin, July 21—Two Communists were killed and a number injured in political riots in spite of marital law and dictatorship decreed by President Von Hindenburg.

One Communist was shot dead and a number wounded when an emergency squad fired on a group of 200 gathered in Southeastern Berlin to protest the martial law edict.

Another was slain by police in a Communist-National Socialist battle at Weisswasser, Saxony. Several were injured at Homburg in a clash of Nazis, Communists and Reichsbannermen. At Suer, in the Ruhr, Nazis fired on "Iron Fronts," Republican supporters, seriously wounding three.

HITLER IN GLEE.

In a speech at Bremen, Adolf Hitler, Nazi leader, expressed his glee over the dictatorship established in Prussia and Brandenburg by the Von Papen government.

"It was high time," the Nazi chieftain said.

The crowd thundered out a mighty cheer when it was announced that Premier Braun, for 11 years head of the Prussian ministry, and Karl Severing, Minister of Defense, were removed from office by the new dictatorial regime.

On the other hand, a mighty crowd, only part of which could squeeze its way into the big circus tent provided for it, cheered former Chancellor Heinrich Bruening at Munich when he deplored the treatment of Herr Severing.

"Like no other man," Dr. Bru-

SOCIETY JEWEL THIEF HUNTED

New York, July 21 (AP)—Long Island police were working on a society jewel mystery today, searching for the lost or stolen octagonal $25,000 emerald brooch that Mrs. Payne Whitney wore to a charity fete at the Marshall Field estate in Huntington last Saturday.

Mrs. Whitney, it was learned today, missed the jewel about midnight.

Noel Scaffa, detective who has been successful in recovering many famous stolen gems, was called into the case. There were reports that he suspected not professional thieves but rather some jewel lover who wanted the brooch for its beauty instead of its intrinsic value.

62,000 Fewer Autos on Bay State Roads

There were 62,000 fewer autos on Massachusetts highways the first six months of this year than there were last year, the registry of motor vehicles announced today. That may or may not be consolation to you the next time you are caught in a traffic jam.

Registrations this year are 803,791 as compared with 865,715 for the same period of 1931. The loss is almost entirely in the class of passenger vehicles.

DEGLANE WEIGHS 216½, JACK 241

World's Champion Henri DeGlane, and challenger Jack Washburn, mat behemoths who will tilt at the Boston Evening American's Christmas Basket Fund at Braves Field tonight, were officially weighed in at City Hall today.

Washburn was first on the scales, and Sealer of Weights and Measures James A. Sweeney was given some nervous moments as the beam on his best scales went up to 241 pounds.

"Just skin and bones," said Washburn, apologetically.

Mr. Sweeney then got out his measuring tape and took DeGlane's height at 5 ft. 8½ in. Aided by a stepladder, he measured Jack Washburn at 6 ft. 2¼ in.

"An revoir," said Champion DeGlane.

"Good day," said Challenger Washburn.

J. Toye's Dog Gets 'L' All Snarled Up

Being a newspaperman's dog, the pooch of Joe Toye, well-known Boston writer, gets himself into the news today, but not before he had succeeded in snarling up the Boston Elevated schedule and giving some of the employes a bad 15 minutes.

The dog, which is a relation—but only a relation—of a police dog, was missing all night from home, and as a train rumbled into the pit at Forest Hills elevated station he was sighted on Dietrick.

It was too late to stop the train, however, and the dog disappeared beneath the cars. At first it was thought he had been killed, but then he was found, crouched and trembling, beneath a car.

He was finally extricated and turned over to the Animal Rescue League, and—such is life—the Boston Evening American scooped the Boston Traveler and Joe by telling him all about it.

FARLEY SEES VICTORY FOR ROOSEVELT

Democratic Chairman Appeals in New Jersey for a Solid Front in November

By JAMES L. KILGALLEN
International News Service Staff Correspondent

Spring Lake, N. J., July 21 (INS)—Declaring that the prospects for a Roosevelt-Garner victory are "dazzingly bright," James A. Farley, chairman of the Democratic national committee and campaign manager for Franklin D. Roosevelt, today made a vigorous plea for united action among Democrats to make victory certain.

Farley was the principal speaker at a luncheon of the State committee at the Essex and Sussex Hotel.

He said that Gov. Roosevelt harbors no rancor over anything that transpired prior to his nomination for the presidency at Chicago.

"There is nothing automatic about this business of supplanting a Republican government with a Democratic one," Farley said, adding:

"None of us can afford the luxury of indulging our disappointments, nursing our grievances and doging our party duty.

"The enemy is powerful and resourceful, even though its leader may be weakest candidate in all political history."

PRAISE FOR HAGUE

Concerning Frank Hague, Democratic leader of New Jersey, who was a strong Al Smith adherent at the Chicago convention, Farley said the Roosevelt forces recognized the Hague delegation as the "shock battalion" of the opposition to their candidate and "gloried" in its steadfastness, because they realized that the "courage, skill and determination exerted against Roosevelt would be translated into equal enthusiasm for the candidate of the convention."

Farley said the Republicans are banking on Democratic disunion to counterbalance the unpopularity of their candidates, the dismay at the errors and omissions of the Hoover administration, the disgust of the country at the failure of the present regime to measure up to the responsibilities of the business slump emergency, and the realization of the shifting, vacillating, evasive character of the government under which the nation has suffered.

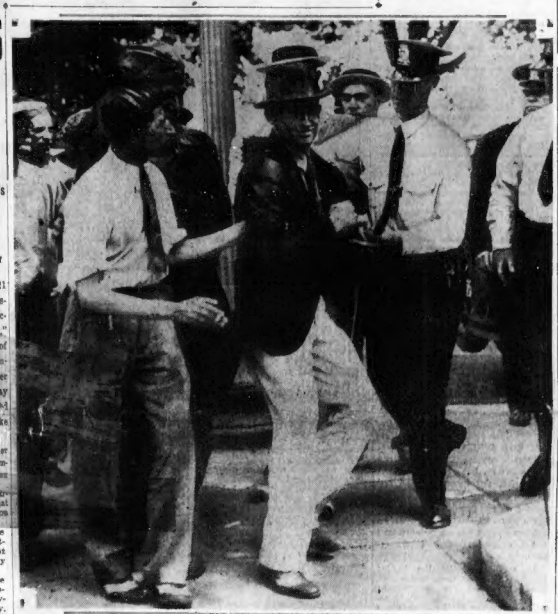
"Their one chance for victory is that there should be treachery in the Democratic line-up," he asserted. "You know, and I know, the vanity, the futility, of any such expectation."

FOR A SOLID FRONT

Farley said this was as good a time as any for him to reveal a secret of the Roosevelt pre-convention campaign.

He declared that long ago—when there was no certainty that Roosevelt would win the nomination in Chicago—it was agreed that, no matter whom the Democratic party nominated, the Roosevelt organization would turn over all its resources to that candidate.

"I mean exactly what I say," asserted Farley, "had the balloting given the nomination to Al Smith, to Governor Ritchie, Speaker Garner, Newton Baker, Governor Byrd, or any other of the eminent Democrats who were in the pre-convention picture, Roosevelt and every member of the organization behind him would have been found in the ranks devoting himself wholeheartedly to the effort to elect the nominee."



Planning to establish a picket line about the White House in Washington, John Pace of Detroit, leader of a radical group in the Soldiers' Bonus Army, staged a demonstration there yesterday and was arrested after a lively skirmish with police. He is shown here being taken off to jail to join Beckwith E. Johnson and Walter Eicher, radical lieutenants who had been arrested previously. (International News Photos.)

Curley Spurs Up Drive to Jail Dole Cheats

In attendance at the conference were Chairman Hecht of the relief bureau, Police Commissioner Hultman, Corporation Counsel Silverman and Budget Commissioner Fox.

The mayor told his department heads that although city officials have been working for five weeks to apprehend and prosecute unworthy persons, to date only 12 have appeared in the courts and less than 40 cases are under investigation.

In addition, he said, indications are that cost of operating the welfare department this month will be in excess of $1,000,000 whereas it was estimated that it would be in the neighborhood of $900,000.

While he did not disclose plans decided upon today the mayor did state that a program was agreed upon which in his opinion will result in weeding out every person on the relief lists who is not entitled to compensation. (Further details on Page 10).

Clinton, July 21 (AP)—The town of Clinton today requested, through Gov. Ely and the executive council, a loan from the federal government under the terms of the recently enacted relief bill. It was the first town in Massachusetts to apply for this relief.

Although Clinton has a bonded indebtedness of only $8500 it has been unable to obtain funds from banks for two months. Town employes have not been paid and welfare work has been conducted by charitable organizations.

The amount of the loan was not specified. At a town meeting Tuesday the voters appropriated $97,000 for town business, but for which the town had no available funds.

PARIS PAPER ASSAILS HOOVER, DEMANDS DEBTS END

'DRAMATIC TRUTH' SEEN IN HEARST RADIO SPEECH

Paris, July 21 (US)—Under the heading "Where Are the Gangsters? France Confronted by Dramatic Truth," La Liberte published the following editorial:

It would be criminal to allow public opinion to remain longer ignorant of the dramatic truth of the debt question.

Parliamentary policy, especially the French policy, humors itself in certain inexactitudes which facilitate the daily life of government and which enable the peoples' representatives to avoid their responsibility but which end always by costing French taxpayers very dearly.

REPARATIONS GONE

Whatever happens and even if parliament refuses to ratify the Lausanne accords, Germany will never pay what is called "infamous tribute."

Having passed a sponge over reparations, they spoke much of debts, notably heavy installments which France is engaged to pay England and America, about five billion annually. Then annuities France should have been able to cover from Germany, thanks to the Young plan.

FRANCE MUST PAY

But these conversations failed to reach a conclusion. England declared she wouldn't renounce the debt from France except if the United States renounced the debt from Great Britain. Now the United States has announced since then, and has repeated, that it refuses and will always refuse to annul European debts.

This also is an established fact, the dramatic truth of France, which can be suppressed but which cannot be denied.

Do we desire to know what America thinks on the debt question let us meditate on what was written recently by President Coolidge, President Hoover's predecessor in the White House and himself a signer of the agreement with France negotiated by Messrs. Mellon and Henry Berenger.

COOLIDGE QUOTED

In the last number of the great American magazine, the Cosmopolitan, which is part of the Hearst publications, President Coolidge devoted a long article to the question of European debts. He considers them, just as we have until yesterday considered reparations, as just debts ascribed to in a regular manner, which should be paid.

"Each nation," he concludes, "should do what it has agreed to do."

Exactly, Mr. Coolidge—except Germany, undoubtedly because it is President Hoover who has destroyed the Young plan!

As for Mr. William Randolph Hearst, he has pronounced and disseminated by radio, with governmental authorization, a speech wherein, in a graphic style which is his own, he has stated in his own fashion a thesis sustained by his contributor, President Coolidge.

Mr. Hearst said:

"For years Europe fought like savage dogs, laying waste until strength was gone and resources exhausted.

"Then the Allies came to us.

"We won the war. We won it for ourselves and for the Allies.

RESPECTED PROMISES

"We spent thousands of millions of dollars on our prosecution of the war, and loaned the Allies thousands of millions of dollars for their prosecution of the war, and also thousands of millions of dollars to rehabilitate themselves.

"We took unquestioning their promises to pay. They gave their word, their bond, their honor—as they had.

"We came home and went to work to pay our taxes.

"The European nations did not like paying taxes. They decided to impose part of the overwhelming indemnity on Germany and part upon the United States, the victorious nation.

SHIFTED DEBT BURDEN

"The Allies repudiated half their debts, and put that burden upon the United States and the other part on Germany.

"Now Germany cannot pay. The Allies have taken all the wealth she has.

"So the Allies have another grand idea to escape paying for their war. They are going to take the wealth we have.

"They are going to repudiate the remaining half of the debt they owe us.

LOSE 11 BILLIONS

"Paying the indemnity the Allies want to impose on us will keep us in financial bondage for a generation.

"But the Europeans think good old Uncle Santa Claus will not mind that.

"Under the proposed debt cancellation, the United States would pay over eleven billions of dollars to the Allies. Thus Germany, the loser of the war, would actually pay less than the victorious nation.

"Frankly, Europe is not only going to try to impose this indemnity upon us, but is going to try to make us like it.

"Let us not be sentimentally idiotic.

"Who trusts a people who repudiate their debts?

"Can perfidy promote peace?

BURDEN FOR TAXPAYERS

"The failure of Europe to pay its debts will merely transfer the debt from the backs of European people to the backs of our own people.

"These European nations entered a 'gentleman's agreement' to force their dishonest cancellation policy on the United States.

"How can there be a gentleman's agreement between welchers?

"How can there be gentlemen whose honor is worthless?

"Let us call it plainly a crooked conspiracy of European confidence men and their American confederates to rob the American people."

CANDOR LAUDED

Thus is expressed, certainly without courtesy, but at least without hypocrisy, the opinion of an immense majority of the American people on the debt question.

Do you think so, too?

Then there is supplementary proof, convincing and unanswerable.

In a few months the United States is going to designate a new President of the Republic for four years.

The program of the Republican party, which represents Mr. Hoover, doesn't even condescend to mention the debt question.

DEBT PLANK CITED

The program of the Democrats, who represent the voters for Franklin Roosevelt—who has been falsely described to us as partisan and outspoken on debts and against whom his opponents wish to exploit this legend—contains one phrase on the debt question. What does it say? This:

"We oppose cancellation of the debts owing to the United States by foreign nations."

Mr. John Garner,- Democratic vice-presidential candidate, said at a public meeting:

"The United States should not listen to any nonsense relative to the capacity of debtor nations to pay."

Such is the truth. Such is the situation wherein France finds itself facing creditors, but receiving nothing more from Germany.

Are we mistaken in saying the situation is dramatic for us?

FEAR PAYING ALL.

French taxpayers already are obligated to pay two billions additional taxes to plug the hole in the budget made by the suppression of the Young plan, due to the initiative and coup de force of President Hoover. They must support, moreover, the whole of the debt contracted for the restoration of the devastated regions.

Shall French taxpayers be obliged also to pay five good billions supplementary taxes so as to pay annuities to the governments in London and Washington, which, to save their credits frozen in Germany, have deprived us of our most sacred rights?

If public opinion fails to act immediately, if it fails to force on governmental pusillanimity, on parliamentary cowardice, a clear and energetic position, France, bled and devastated by war, will end by being the only one to pay for all the costs and all the devastations of the war.

If you don't accept this crime against France, sign and get others to sign our referendum.

(The last sentence refers to blank petition printed daily by La Liberte for signatures' protest against further payments to England and the United States.—Ed. Note.)

SHIPSTEAD HITS MORATORIUM

Washington, July 21 (INS)—Efforts of administration leaders to sell-pedal the debt cancellation issue received another setback today as a flood of congratulatory messages greeted the speech broadcast by Senator Shipstead (F.L.) of Minnesota.

Foreign governments intent on debt cancellation are forming a "ring of iron" about the United States, Shipstead warned.

International bankers and American holders of German reparation bonds are working hand in glove with European debtor nations, he declared, adding that the Hoover moratorium was a betrayal of American taxpayers.

"It is apparent that debtor governments and our own private investors in foreign securities are combining their forces in a concerted drive against the American taxpayers for the purpose of placing their debts and doubtful investments on the taxpayers' backs," the senator said.

"That is saying it bluntly, but it appears to be a fact."

EAST BOSTON BORE FINISHED

Three months ahead of schedule, the boring of the East Boston traffic tunnel will be completed next Monday, and exercises will be held at the Boston terminus at 11 a. m.

Announcement of the early completion of the undertaking was made today by Col. Thomas F. Sullivan, chairman of the transit commission.

Col. Sullivan said that the concrete work would take about a year and a half, and that the opening of the tube to autos will probably be before January 1, 1934.

The tunnel is 4800 feet long and is through the mud and clay of the harbor bed. Work was started August 1, 1931.

Winchester, Va., July 21 (AP)—Hard times or good times, George Hill, a York, Pa., "Yankee," makes his annual pilgrimage to pay tribute to his "Rebel" friends.

The Union veteran, now 87, was here again today to lay a wreath on the graves of Thomas Reardon and his daughter Honorah, who picked the "Yankee" up off the battlefield at White Post and nursed him back to health. He was with Sheridan's troops in the bloody battles with Stonewall Jackson's men.

BANKS TO HELP SMALL FIRMS

Cleveland, July 21 (AP)—A new attitude of "credit leniency" by bankers toward thousands of small business enterprises, as a means of starting a general business recovery, was "urgently recommended" today by an imposing committee of bankers and industrialists.

The recommendation, coming from the banking and industrial committee of the Fourth Federal Reserve District, was directed to all financial institutions in the district, which embraces Ohio, Western Pennsylvania, Eastern Kentucky and a part of West Virginia.

"A survey among 3000 manufacturers has disclosed," the committee said, "that there is a vast amount of productive business available, particularly to the small manufacturers within the district, if banking accommodations can be extended to finance such productive business.

"It is our conclusion that it lies within the power of the bankers to make a great and important contribution toward improvement in present business conditions."

Britons Race Irish Tariff

Dublin, July 21 (AP)—English merchants were making frantic efforts today to beat the deadline of the Free State emergency tariffs which probably will become effective Saturday.

These tariffs are retaliatory measures against duties imposed by the British Parliament on Free State goods, and once they become effective the economic warfare between the Free State and Britain will be on in earnest.

A flood of goods is pouring in to the port of Dublin from England. This was made possible by the action of the Free State Senate yesterday in altering the measure, thus making it necessary for the bill to be sent back to the lower house. The Dail meets in emergency session tomorrow

CANADA FAVORS TARIFF BLOW AT U. S. TRADE

Bennett Urges an All-British Pact, With "Preferential Duties" for All Empire Goods

By GEORGE R. HOLMES
International News Service Staff Correspondent.

Ottawa, Ont., July 21 (INS)—A program which if carried to fulfillment will strike a severe blow at American trade was proposed to the British Imperial Economic Conference today by the Canadian prime minister, Richard B. Bennett.

The Canadian plan, in brief, proposes to establish a system of preferential tariffs throughout the empire in order to accelerate the flow of inter-empire trade.

Looking directly at the British delegation headed by ex-Premier Stanley Baldwin and Chancellor of the Exchequer Neville Chamberlain, the Canadian premier said:

"Canada proposes to grant to the United Kingdom:

"1—Extension of the free list.

"2—Retention of the existing preferences in favor of Great Britain.

"3—Increased preferences in respect to a selected list of articles in which Great Britain is especially equipped to supply the Canadian market without injuring efficient Canadian enterprise.

"And in exchange, Canada asks:

"1—Retention of existing preferences.

"2—Their effective extension to those other natural and processed products of which the United Kingdom is an importer."

And the proposal, Bennett added, is applicable to all the other British dominions, of which there are nine represented in this conference.

He did not specify the commodities on which Canada is willing to extend or grant new preferences. That will come later in the committee meetings behind closed doors.

"This will be, too, where the rub comes in, for Canada has become greatly industrialized since the war, and Canadian manufacturers are apprehensive of their home market being flooded with British goods.

MUTUAL TRADING PACT

"The agreement," Bennett said, "should be an enduring one.

"This is not the time for ephemeral treaties. We must decide our course and follow it unswervingly.

"An arrangement terminable on short notice would, I fear, have but the effect of increasing instability of conditions, trade stability is essential to our recovery. Furthermore, a short agreement would suggest a doubt as to its advantages."

The speech was the highlight of the conference opening, and the proposal of tariff preferentials was listened to attentively by all the Dominion representatives.

Earlier, delegates had listened to a message from King George in which he voiced that his "prayers and thoughts" were with the delegates.

Food of All Kinds for Ottawa Meet

Ottawa, July 21 (AP)—In honor of the delegates to the Imperial Conference special foods from every country in the British empire have been brought to Ottawa.

'AL' FOR SENATE, WAGNER FOR GOVERNOR

New York, July 21 (INS)—Possibility that United States Senator Wagner would become the Democratic candidate for Governor of New York, and Alfred E. Smith, former Governor, the candidate for Senator to succeed Wagner, was discussed today by Democrats.

Official confirmation was lacking, but, although Governor Roosevelt is eager to have Lieut.-Gov. Lehman become Governor, it was believed he might endorse the proposed State slate so as to make his peace with Smith.

CABINET POST PRIZE

In that event Lehman would be promised a Cabinet position should Roosevelt be elected, observers said.

It was also learned that Smith had talked over the situation with John F. Curry, leader of Tammany Hall.

Friends of Smith denied he had asked Curry to try to overcome Wagner's objections to retiring from the Senate so the former Governor could seek his post. They pointed out that Smith recently branded reports of his reentry into the active political scene as "just a dope story."

VICTORY MOVE URGED

Conflicting with these persistent reports was the definite hint last week that Smith intended to issue a strong indorsement of Lehman for governor and force Tammany to follow suit.

ening said, "Severing gave 14 years of his life for the German nation, and against Communism."

RED NEWSPAPER BLAMED

Police closed the publishing offices of the Communist newspaper Rote Fahne. The paper yesterday published a special issue in which it urged a political mass strike in protest against the dictatorship.

Delegates of labor organizations from all over the country were summoned to meet today to consider the situation.

Shortly before noon there was some disorder in Alexander-Platz near police headquarters. Police found a crowd of Communists attacking a single Nazi and immediately pitched into the reds.

The Communists resisted and several were injured. A few shots were fired, but the riot was quelled after a number of arrests.

Dr. Franz Bracht, appointed dictator for Prussia and serving as minister of the interior, was an early arrival at the office formerly occupied by Severing and promptly told attaches their services were over.

INSURGENTS FACE TRIAL

Notified that several members of the former Prussian cabinet were in conference in the offices of the Ministry of Welfare, he sent this ironical message to them:

"By what method or appliance of force do you chose to be deposed definitely?"

Without awaiting an answer he seated himself at Severing's desk and drew up formal charges against former high officials of the Berlin police department, including President Albert Grzesinski, vice-President Bernhard Weiss and Maj. Heimannsberg.

Their trial was demanded for resisting the enforcement of yesterday's emergency decree, conviction for which would render them liable to imprisonment and a fine of $4000.

The Social Democratic section of the Essen Municipal Council today refused to sanction leave for Mayor Bracht to occupy his new post as dictator. The refusal was based upon the ground that he is indispensable to the city.

The Rightist government of Saxony declined today to join Bavaria's protest to the Supreme Court against the dictatorship.

Court to Hear Protest of Ousted Prussians

Leipzig, Germany, July 21 (INS)—The State court today decided to hear on Saturday the application of the deposed Prussian Cabinet for a temporary injunction to restrain the Reich from interfering with the Prussian government pending final decision on the issues involved in the decree naming a dictator for the Prussian state.

Beauty Wins Annulment on Drug Addict Charge

New York, July 21—Mrs. Helen McBride, former Follies beauty, won an annulment of her marriage because her husband, Emerson L. McBride, misrepresented his income to her and concealed the fact that he was a drug addict.

The decree was granted by John M. Tierney, official referee. The former stage star testified that her husband told her before their marriage that he was earning "big money."

high finance—with stock prices where they are today.

To check the building of the St. Lawrence waterway, connecting the Great Lakes with the ocean, making every lake city a seaport, would be a calamity. But it is said that Senator Norris may ask, "Who is to own and get profits from two million horsepower electric that the canal will produce?"

It seems inconceivable that power produced by damming the people's money should not belong to the people. But everyone remembers the amusing Muscle Shoals story, and everybody knows that in our country the dear public is supposed not to own or operate anything UNLESS OPERATION FAILS TO PAY, IN WHICH CASE THE PUBLIC SHOULD TAKE IT OVER AND PAY THE DEFICIT.

Senator Borah also will have something to say about the new waterway, which must be approved by the Senate. Let us hope a way will be found to avoid robbing the people TOO thoroughly, and to avoid breaking the hearts of too many "power people."

The waterway is needed, and no matter what happens now, the people will always have power to do what seems wise and just. In the power of "eminent domain," and the power to tax, there are remedies for many evils, if the people choose to use them.

GRAND JURORS CALLED BY TELEGRAPH

Gun "Planted" Near Stark's Auto, Attorney Hints in the Case Against 13 Policemen

Mineola, N. Y., July 21 (INS)—Summoned by telegraph for an extraordinary session, the grand jury convened today to consider second-degree murder and other charges against five of the 13 members of the Nassau County police force involved in the "third degree" death of Hyman Stark, alleged bandit.

So many county detectives have been withdrawn from police activity that four major criminal investigations have had to be dropped for a time. One of these is the investigation of the death of Starr Faithful.

Swiftly as developments followed in the unfolding of the "third degree" practices, which because of their fatal results in this instance may lead to suppression of such methods in the future, there was a turn today which threatened to overshadow them temporarily.

Samuel Leibowitz, attorney for Stark's family and his three companions, hinted he was probing a possible police "frame-up" in connection with the case.

BELIEVES GUN "PLANTED"

He intimated that a gun police said was found near the car in which Stark and the others were arrested on suspicion of beating and robbing a detective's mother may have been "planted."

"It would be something of a surprise if it should turn out that the gun belonged to a policeman, wouldn't it?" Leibowitz asked.

"I am tracing the number of the revolver. I wouldn't be doing that unless I were pretty sure the gun did not belong to any of my clients."

Dist. Atty. Elvin N Edwards will present the evidence and witnesses before the grand jury. His assistant, Martin W. Littleton, Jr., and three newspapermen were to be among those called to testify.

13 FACE CHARGES

The four held by Justice Meier Steinbrink, sitting as committing magistrate, on second degree murder charges are Lieut. Jesse Mayforth, Detective-Sergeant Charles Wesser, Detectives Leslie W. Pearsall and Harry W. Zandler.

Deputy Chief Frank Troppon, whom Littleton quoted as boasting he put his feet on Stark's throat and stomach "and rocked back and forth," was held as an accessory.

Seven other policemen were committed accused of second degree assault.

Joseph Hizenski, son of the woman allegedly attacked by the quartet of prisoners, is among the 12.

Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt, in Albany, was studying petitions by local residents for superseding Edwards in the conduct of the case, but Edwards pushed the prosecution vigorously pending any action from Albany.

FRIEND TAKES STAND AGAINST MRS. BOLDUC

Troopers Testify Defendant Admitted Shooting in Self Defense

Greenfield, July 21—Miss Grace Coyle, who yesterday testified that Edmund Bolduc, 25, of Colrain, had gone out with another woman two nights before he was slain, will return to the stand at today's session of the manslaughter trial of Mrs. Marcella Bolduc, 22.

Mrs. Bolduc is being tried before Judge William A. Burns in connection with her husband's death. The trial opened yesterday with Dist Atty. Joseph T. Bartlett of Franklin County, outlining the Commonwealth's case after a jury was empanelled and 11 witnesses sworn in by the prosecution.

Miss Coyle, a next-door neighbor of the Bolduc family, was the last witness heard yesterday and court adjourned before her testimony was completed.

PICKED UP GIRLS

She revealed she had been at the Bolduc home in the afternoon and evening of July 5. She said Fred Mazenec was there in the evening and told Mrs. Bolduc he and her husband had been out the night before the Fourth with two girls they picked up in Shelburne Falls.

She said later Bolduc called his wife into another room and that shortly after she heard a scream and Bolduc saying: "My wife shot me."

She said she heard no shot but later saw Bolduc was wounded and that Mrs. Bolduc was holding a gun in her hands. She said Mrs. Bolduc resented the manner in which Mazenec had spoken about being out with her husband and other women.

TROOPERS ON STAND

Two State troopers were also called as witnesses. Trooper Harold B. Dineen, who interviewed Mrs. Bolduc in Franklin County Hospital after the shooting, said she told him she had fired in self-defense.

Trooper Warren D. Mallett said Mrs. Bolduc admitted loading the rifle and firing the shot. He said the woman declared her husband had threatened her.

Bolduc was shot in the evening, July 5, and died two days later. The first account ascribed his wound to the accidental discharge of a .22-calibre rifle which he was cleaning.

BOAT RACE STAR SUED FOR FEE

New York, July 21—That all has not been serene recently in the household of Will Mahoney, Broadway stage comedian, was disclosed when a lawyer brought suit against Mahoney's wife for his efforts in ironing out their domestic differences.

T. Roger Mahon, of 522 Fifth ave., filed a suit in Supreme Court, Manhattan, asking $10,200. He declared that sum due him after he had been retained June 8 in connection with Mrs. Mahoney's marital problems.

Justice Dore granted Mahon permission to bring action by substituted service as Mrs. Mahoney had been evading two of his process servers who called ten times at her 40 East 66th st. home.

The attorney charges he had negotiated a separation agreement and arranged for a property settlement when Mrs. Mahoney suddenly walked out on him and refused to proceed further.

Mrs. Mahoney is an outboard racing devotee.

GRANDI WILL BE BRITISH ENVOY

London, July 21 (AP)—Dino Grandi, who as foreign minister came to be a sort of traveling representative of the Italian government, probably will be the next ambassador to Great Britain, it appeared today.

It was disclosed that inquiries had been made on behalf of the Italian government as to whether he would be acceptable, and that the reply was in the affirmative.

Grandi was removed from the foreign ministry yesterday in a cabinet shakeup ordered by Mussolini. Today the premier took over the office and his lieutenant went on a vacation.

Camden, N. J., July 21 (AP)—An anonymous telephone call, police said, in which the caller declared "the beer parade is going up Broadway again," resulted today in the arrest of six men and the seizure of five trucks loaded with alleged beer.

It was the first seizure of trucks since Mayor Roy Stewart recently ordered police to keep beer trucks off Camden streets.

FIFI AND SON IN 2 AIR CRASHES

Gary, Ind., July 21 (INS)—Young Alexander Stilman's aerial jaunt to rejoin his mother, Mrs. Fowler "Fifi" McCormick, skirted the fringes of disaster, but today mother and son were happily reunited.

Thankful were they both for the providence which saved them from possible death or serious injury in two airplane crashes.

Bruises and a gash over 22-year-old Alexander's eye, healed by 11 surgical stitches, were the only mementoes of the two mishaps.

The youthful son of Mrs. McCormick and her first husband, Banker James A. Stillman, was the first to meet with misfortune when his private airplane turned over as he was attempting a forced landing last night in a swamp two miles west of Gary.

A few hours later the mother, flying to the bedside of her son in Mercy Hospital, figured in the second accident. The plane in which she and her young husband were passengers fell over on its side as Pilot Homer Berry was bringing the ship to a landing at the Lansing (Ill.) airport.

Refusing first aid treatment, Mr. and Mrs. McCormick leaped into a waiting automobile and sped to Gary, where it was later found they had suffered no injuries save shock.

NORTH'S ARCTIC SHIP IS SAFE

Seattle, Wash., July 21 (AP)—An amateur radio operator picked up a message from an Alaskan station last night, directed to the Associated Press, reporting the safety of Frank North, writer and explorer, although his severely buffeted vessel had been badly damaged in storms north of the Alaskan peninsula.

The message, sent by an amateur at Ugashik, Alaska, said North had left Ikatan, on the Unimak Island, in the Aleutians, on June 23, and no word had been received from him until his vessel put into Ugashik, after a great deal of stormy weather.

A preliminary survey indicated, the message said, that the vessel had been so badly damaged it could not be repaired in time to enter the Artic ice pack this season.

North and his party spent some time exploring Shishaldin volcano, and were the first to reach it after its severe eruption several months ago, the message added. Last month Fr. Bernard Hubbard, Santa Clara University professor, ascended the volcano.

3000 STRIKERS BACK IN MILLS

High Point, N. C., July 21 (AP)—Approximately 3000 employes went back to work here today, leaving only operatives of 24 textile mills and several other smaller concerns on strike.

Anticipated disturbances failed to materialize as the employes returned after a general walkout paralized industrial High Point Tuesday.

Four other nearby manufacturing centers, also affected when roving bands of strikers and unemployed men forced a shutdown by turning off power in the mills, operated normally today.

Meanwhile, police continued to round up leaders of the roving groups that caused the shutdown, charging them with inciting to riot. Twenty have been arrested.

VAGRANT TAKES FLAT; IS JAILED

Possession may be nine points of the law in some far-flung sectors but it didn't get much today in Municipal court for John L. March.

John was sentenced to three months in the House of Correction as a vagrant after being arrested in a house in Oswego st., South End where he was entertaining half a dozen derelicts—with 400 pounds of cucumbers as refreshments.

Where the cucumbers came from was not explained, but Judge Zottoli was told March had moved into the flat without permission of the owners and had taken possession of another flat upstairs to cook his meals, whatever they were.

Too Hot for Spaghetti So He Slides Away, But Is Anchored

Cleveland, July 21 (AP)—Spaghetti, a four and a half foot alligator, was adequately collared and anchored down today to cure him of those itching feet.

It was hot yesterday, too hot for Spaghetti, and he started out from his backyard to hunt something more like his native Florida Everglades.

Presently he found the doorstep of Mrs. L. W. Wilson. She grabbed the telephone and yelled for police.

"Send help quick! There's a sea serpent in my back yard!" she shouted.

HAIGIS WILL NOT SEEK ELY'S JOB

Greenfield, July 21 (AP)—John W. Haigis, former state treasurer, today announced that he would not be a candidate for the Republican nomination for governor. He said he based his decision largely on a survey designed to learn the sentiment toward such a candidacy. This, he said, while on the whole satisfactory, revealed that certain important groups would withhold their support in the belief that a former governor would eventually announce his candidacy.

HELPLESS BOY CONVICT SHOT IN THE BACK

Tallahassee, Fla., July 21 (INS)—Gov. Carlton today ordered an immediate investigation into the sensational charges of James Dennison, young Philadelphia convict, who accused a prison guard of shooting him in the back as he lay helpless on the ground following an unsuccessful attempt to escape.

Dennison charges Walter Gaff, 25, with firing a pistol shot into his back, after he had been felled by shotgun slugs. The youth said the shooting occurred on Jan. 12, when he tried to escape with two boys.

TELLS OWN STORY

Dennison told his story to International News Service while on a hospital bed at the Raiford prison. He was encased from his ribs to his ankles in a plaster cast, with prison physicians making every effort to save his life. He has been in the hospital for six months. He moaned pitifully from time to time. He has blood poisoning in his right heel, as well as a four-inch wound in his right leg from the shotgun slugs which broke the leg and shattered the bone.

SERVING A YEAR

The youth, just 21, was serving a year for stealing an auto.

The boy told a dramatic story of his attempted escape with B. B. Reynolds and Henry Graff. He said Reynolds was killed in the attempt, but Graff was recaptured unwounded. He charged Graff was beaten by the guards.

Boy Shot in Back Thrown on Prison Camp Floor to Die

By JAMES DENNISON
(Story of 21-year-old Philadelphia prisoner in Florida prison camp as told to International News Service).

State Prison Hospital, Raiford, Fla., July 21—I can tell you about cruel treatment in a Florida prison camp. I was shot in the back by a guard while I laid on the ground, helpless. They said I was shot trying to escape. I did try to escape, but I was brought down by a shotgun charge that poured five slugs into my leg. Then, while I lay on the ground, a guard ran up to me and fired a shot into my back from a .38-cal. revolver.

This happened at road camp No. 41, near Kehanaville, not far from Lake Okeechobee, Fla., on January 12, 1932. I and two other boys tried to escape. The way we had been treated, kicked around, cursed around and knocked around, worked from daylight until night on road building. Who could stand that? But it was under Capt. O. E. Dollar, and he's known all over the state for his cruel treatment of prisoners.

The three of us ran away one morning. They killed B. B. Reynolds, a Pensacola (Fla.) boy and buried him in a swamp. I don't believe his parents know he's dead. The third boy was only beaten. He got away with his life.

FALLS TO SHOTGUN

We tried to escape by jumping off a truck one morning. We had no guns. We didn't try to attack the guards or to hurt anybody or to cause a riot. We only ran. I only got 25 or 50 feet when a guard brought me down with his shotgun. There's a hole in my leg now that you can throw a dollar through. Five big slugs hit me in the circle of four inches.

While I lay on the ground, a guard named Gafford, ran up to me and shot me in the back with a .38. He said he ought to shoot my ——— head off. I have the scar on my back right now to prove he shot me with a revolver. A half dozen prisoners and the other guard saw him do it.

The other guard said:

"I didn't want to kill that little yellow (meaning me) but I sure wanted to kill that big guy (Reynolds)."

Reynolds was only 22, he weighed 180 pounds and was nicely built. I was hit with only one shot from the shotgun, but it put five slugs in my leg. It took four inches of bone right out of my leg and made a hole through it as big as my wrist.

TERRIBLE WOUNDS

You can imagine how many times they shot Reynolds. When I saw his body, half his arm was torn off, the side was ripped away from under his heart and half his back was torn away. He must have had 40 slugs in him. Any one of those slugs would kill a man if it hit him right. They are just like 38 bullets.

The third boy was Henry Graff, about 20 years old, from Chicago. They beat him up horribly. I saw them do it while I lay on the ground. One guard held him with one hand and beat him about the head with a revolver butt. The other guard took his shotgun and held it by the butt like a club and beat him over the head and shoulders with the rifle barrel. The second guard swung the shotgun with both hands. They nearly killed him.

They took me back t othe camp in the truck and threw me on the floor of the prison building. A doctor came and gave me no treatment other than to put my leg in splints and tie some bandages around it. They left me there three days and Inuffered tortures. I think they wanted me to die.

Finally, they brought me to the hospital here (at Raiford). I still got blood poisoning in my hee from lack of proper medical treatment at the camp. I had to have a major operation after I got here. They even had to call in a bone specialist. They treated me fine here. That's all that saved my life. And here I am, in a cast, lying on the flat of my back.

Well, it's a wonder I am alive.

NOTED FORGER HUNTED HERE

Raye Bassett, the nation's most notorious forger, is operating in Boston and warning of his presence was sent throughout New England today by local authorities.

He victimized two stores for a total of $110 on Tuesday and warrants were sworn out against him by Inspector Dilion today. Apprehending him is another matter, however.

Bassett, who is 40 and a native of Lincoln, Neb., escaped from the Washington State Insane hospital in February of last year. A month previous he had escaped from the Nebraska hospital where he was serving a life sentence for 19 years of forgery through the West.

Since 1913 he has been arrested for forgery in 14 States and served sentences in two federal prisons, four State prisons and two State hospitals.

He is at present using a set of counterfeit traveler's checks on the United States National Bank of Vancouver.

BARNEY WIDOW SPARED JAIL

London, July 21 (AP)—Mrs. Elvira Dolores Barney, beautiful former actress who was acquitted two weeks ago of a charge of murder, was brought into court again today and fined $175 and $36 costs for possessing a revolver without a license.

She pleaded guilty to the charge, which was filed against her at the same time she was charged with the murder of Thomas William Scott Stephen, a young Londoner, in her apartment in the fashionable West End.

It was during the struggle for the possession of the revolver in question that Stephen was accidentally shot, she testified at her murder trial.

She was deeply affected by allusions to the tragedy in the presentation of the case today and sobbed loudly throughout the address to the court. She collapsed at the end and had to be assisted out of the courtroom.

In pronouncing sentence, the magistrate said the case would call for imprisonment as well as fine if it were not for the ordeal she had already undergone.

8 CARRIED DOWN LADDERS AT LYNN FIRE

Eight members of two families were rescued over ladders today when fire swept the house at 13 Highland ave., Lynn, causing damage of $4000.

The fire started in a cellar and gained headway while the occupants slept.

When firemen reached the scene the front and rear stairways were burning and those within were at the windows calling for help.

Mr. and Mrs. Mehlan Brigian and their children, Sarah, 11, and Edward, 9, were first taken out and then firemen rescued Mr. and Mrs. Corcoin and their daughter Josephine, 16, and Margaret, 10.

Troops Called in Indiana Mine War

Dugger, Ind., July 21 (AP)—Three companies of Indiana National Guardsmen were ordered today to the vicinity of the Hoosier Coal Mine, which 20 non-union workmen have refused to leave until assured protection from more than a thousand union sympathizers maintaining a picket around the shaft.

The men on picket duty sit under trees smoking pipes and spinning yarns, while their wives serve them food.

WOMAN FACES WEST END GANG MURDER QUIZ

Police activities today indicated that solution of the gang slaying of Charles Castelone, man of many rackets, on Lowell st., West End, was near.

Questioning of a woman, whose identity was carefully shielded by police officials, was scheduled for late this afternoon, and a number of other persons were also on the list for grilling.

Activities began with the appearance at headquarters of Capt. James R. Claflin of the West End division, who has been on vacation. Claflin conferred with Supt Crowley and then with Commissioner Hultman, before going to his station.

Later today the West End divisional commander was in conference for some time with Inspector Harry Pierce of the headquarters homicide squad. It was understood that Pierce would question the unnamed witnesses.

Claflin has had many years' experience as a detective and has a broad knowledge of racketeering.

Hot Weather Gets Europe

By ARTHUR 'BUGS' BAER

With Von Hindy grabbing Germany by the ears this is a nice time to stay under your own cool tree.

The old boy has slapped everything under military rule. That's what they call a coup datatt, which means you get the hen and the other guy gets the feathers.

It means that a state of war exists exactly like the time when your best girl was up in front with Clark Gable driving and you were in the rumble seat.

Well, those German nudists are neutral anyway. Nobody can accuse them of being in an enemy uniform.

We were hoping to get over to Berlin this season and do some deep breathing in a stein of Pilsener. But now we'll go to Canada and have a merry old paper chase with the Royal Northwest Mounted.

Both Von Hindy and Mussolini fired their cabinets yesterday and the boys stole 50 seconds' start on a minute's notice.

Oil Starts Fire in Charlestown Street

Road oil just laid on Alford st., Everett, caught fire today and the street blazed until Charlestown firemen put the fire out. The oil had been spread by a truck driven by Thomas P. Fleming, Abbott st., Lynn, which was parked by the side of the street, when the rear end burst into flames.

The flames spread to the street and the unusual sight drew a large crowd from the Sullivan sq. district.

Everett Man's Body Recovered in Lake

The body of Abel Fridstrom, 40, of Everett, came to the surface in Lake Quannapowitt, Wakefield, today, while volunteer workers were about to renew efforts that had been under way since Fridstrom was drowned Monday.

Fridstrom was tossed into the water from an outboard motorboat while "stunting." David Ingerton, swimming instructor at the lake, had directed the search for the body day and night since then.

Riot Squad Joins in Hunt for Dogs

The riot squad of the East Boston police station turned out today in an attempt to capture two dogs who had killed 20 chickens, the property of Joseph Doyle of Wadsworth st., East Boston.

Neighbors were aroused by the squawking of the victims and sent for the police. Patrolman Joseph Schwand, chief dog catcher of Station 7, is still chasing the dogs.

PLEA TO EXTEND BUS SERVICE

Weymouth, Hingham and Cohasset residents will get through bus service to Hull and Brockton if a petition of the New England Transportation Co., heard today by the public utilities commission, is approved.

The company seeks amendment of restriction on its Brockton-Hull line in order to pick up and discharge passengers within the limits of the three towns.

Weymouth town officials and representatives of the Lovell Bus Lines opposed on the ground that the business of the Lovell company, which recently took over the Eastern Massachusetts Railway business in the area, would be injured.

There was no opposition to a petition o fthe Eastern Massachusetts to substitute buses for trolleys on its Lowell division, first step in the replacement of all trolleys in the area.

N. E. CROPS CUT BY DROUTH

With the middle west still sweltering in the worst heat wave of the season, one that has taken a number of lives, Greater Boston was fairly comfortable again today, with showers predicted for tomorrow.

The showers, however, will not be heavy enough, the weather man said, to kill the threat of drouth in Massachusetts and sections of New Hampshire, Vermont and Rhode Island.

Lack of rain has already begun to be felt in the Boston markets, where the flow of produce has been greatly curtailed.

In other sections of New England, excepting along the northern borders, brooks, streams and ponds are fast shrinking, with no heavy rain in sight.

The temperature here today was in the high 70s and a bit warmer than yesterday. The record, however, for this date was 98 degrees in 1926.

FULLER IS NOT A CANDIDATE

"I do not expect to be a candidate for governor," former Gov. Alvan T. Fuller told the Boston Evening American over the telephone from his Rye beach home this afternoon.

His statement was in answer to an inquiry sponsored by the announcement of former State Treasurer Fred W. Haigis that he, too, would not run. It had been rumored that Haigis would seek the Republican nomination is assured that Fuller would not be a candidate.

"Mr. Haigis' announcement has no bearing upon my intentions," Fuller said.

Everybody'll Hit Trail for Wigwam, Tonight

LIGHTING the old Jimmy Pipe and parked in the one chair which best suits our center of equilibrium, our thoughts turned to some of the bee-oo-tiful rough and tumble scraps we have seen. That night at the end of the drive on the Shawanaga, when Long Bill Garrett and Poleon LeCroix fought like two bull moose in the rutting season, clawing and biting like a parcel of wildcats and kicking like a pair of Alabama mules. The night the late Tom Shevlin, Yale's great All-American end, came out second best in the bruising battle with the bouncers at Jack Dunstan's famous, old all-night rendezvous on Sixth Avenue, New York. Kid McCoy beating three life guards in the bath house at Brighton Beach. Doing the Barbary Coast in the old days with a Frisco sports scribe and seeing that pair of husky wharf rats fight to the near death over a dame that wasn't worth it. Knives were brought into play before it was over that night, just as razors flashed that night Buck Wilson, seeking to let us see some "local color" took us to the cullud crap game down in Charleston, South C'lina. But save for that besark backwoods battle between those two Shawanaga lumberjacks none of those impromptu rough and tumbles carried more pure and unadulterated action than the knockdown and drag-out shindy those two Bad Men of the Mat, Gentleman Jack Washburn and Charlie Strack committed a couple of months ago in the Boston Garden.

AND tonight this same Jack Washburn, former miner, bridge and iron worker, World War hero, Hollywood actor and goodness knows what not, who now holds undisputed away as King of the Rough Housers, will come strutting, swashbuckling, into the ring at Braves Field to give battle to Henri DeGlane, heavyweight wrestling champion of the world!

BOY, oh boy, that's one shindy we wouldn't miss for the proverbial farm! Seeing a couple of hundred thousand other persons enjoy the same sentiments, if the Weather Man is only good, and he promises us a fair and balmy evening, they'll pack Braves Field, tonight, until it bulges out into Commonwealth ave. With the King of Rough Housers and the greatest wrestler the game has developed since Frank Gotch's time in there demolishing and wrecking each other's anatomies, a good time certainly will be had by all. We'll be hitting the trail for the Wigwam tonight.

THAT, friend fans, is a peculiar introduction to a fanfest on a world's heavyweight wrestling championship match. But we believe in calling a spade a spade. Until recent years lumberjack and longshore tactics were taboo on the wrestling mat. But modern wrestling has developed into nothing more or less than licensed slugger, perhaps one might even say mayhem and murder, as far as any match in which Gentleman Jack Washburn is a participant is concerned. Some may think they are going to a wrestling championship. But most of us know we are going to see the "sweetest" rough and tumble that e'er was fought at an old-fashioned Pathron Day in County Wicklow. It's the scrap, not the tilt for the title, that is bringing all of us there, everyone from Grandma down to little dog Towser. You'll see a bigger turnout of the fair sex than for any sporting event in years. "The female of the species is more deadly than the male." Kipling was right.

REMEMBER this world's heavyweight wrestling championship, or Big Rough and Tumble—call it what you like—is in aid of New England's biggest and worthiest charity, the Xmas Basket Fund of Mr. Hearst's Boston Evening American. Remember the great good done by this charity in the past. Remember, starvation, want, suffering will be knocking on more Boston doors this winter than ever in history. Remember a fair percentage of every dollar paid in at the gate will go to giving a Merry Xmas to somebody's suffering mother, father, brother, sister or child.

IN THESE dismal days of depression "Give!" "Give!" is heard upon every side. Many of us have given, are giving, until it hurts. The BOSTON EVENING AMERICAN is not asking you to "give" tonight. It is giving you the greatest of all New England sports attractions at popular prices with the understanding that a fair percentage of what you pay will go to the worthiest of New England charities. It is giving you a chance to kill two birds with the same stone. You are getting the greatest sports attraction obtainable at a bargain price and getting the chance to help where help will be needed the most. Enough said!

WHAT'S going to happen? Is DeGlane going to leave the mat as he enters it, heavyweight wrestling champion of the universe? Or is the King of the Rough Housers going to mount the heavyweight wrestling throne and hold sway over two kingdoms? We consider Henri DeGlane as the greatest wrestler in the world, the greatest grappler since the palmy days of Frank Gotch. But take nothing for granted in wrestling. Queer things happen on the mat. If what most of us want to see happen does happen, the Herculean Frenchman will wring Washburn's neck. Oh, how the mat addicts hate the Bad Man! What an army of haters Washburn has built up! Nothing would suit them better than to see poor Jack rended limb from limb!

TO US, personally, Jack Washburn is nothing more or less than a wrestling false alarm. A big, burly, good-natured bully, with an innate sense of acting, a genial, big-paunched giant who is more of an actor than an athlete, such an actor, in fact, he has become one of the mat game's biggest box office magnets. We believe Henri DeGlane, strong as Samson, tough as rawhide, with the stamina and endurance of a broncho, and master of a hundred wrestling holds, can, if he likes, "break the giant Washburn in two." And we have a hunch that Washburn is going to slug and gouge and knee and kick the French Gamecock into such a cantankerous mood tonight that the Herculean Frenchman actually will "break him in two." Whether we're right or wrong, we'll know at Braves Field tonight. All set? Let's go!

THE CHALLENGER—

Title Go at Tepee Tonight

By JACK CONWAY

Henri DeGlane against "Gentleman" Jack Washburn!

The stage is set for the "Wrestling Battle of the Century" which takes place at Braves Field tonight under the direction of Paul Bowser for the Christmas Basket Fund of the Boston Evening American.

The greatest crowd ever to witness a mat carnival in New England will witness the struggle for supremacy between DeGlane and his doughty American challenger.

DeGlane still ruled a 10 to 9 favorite in the betting today. The arrival of a ton of Washburn money from New York and Chicago is likely to send "Gentleman" Jack into the ring an even money choice. There is a strong feeling in certain quarters that Washburn will be permitted to do anything he wishes in the ring tonight. Under such conditions he has more than an even chance of winning.

Ted Tonneman of Chicago will referee. It was learned today that Tonneman is friendly with Toots Mondt who has sponsored Washburn in his drive for the championship.

It is also felt that the crowd will be with Washburn because he is an American. There is a desire to see DeGlane, the Frenchman, pulled from his throne.

DeGlane is admittedly a better wrestler than Washburn. The champion is letter perfect when under fire. He is cold blooded and as crafty as a fox. He likes to play a waiting game, and when he springs he usually pins his man.

Washburn has been coached by Earl Caddock and Mondt in the art of wrestling, but he prefers rough house tactics. If Tonneman allows "Gentleman" Jack to call his own shots, the challenger is liable to knock DeGlane out with a short punch or with one of his brutal kicks to the mid-section.

DeGlane came into Boston from Marlboro this morning. He made a last minute demand for fair play. He asked Paul Bowser to see that he doesn't get the "works" tonight.

The Frenchman believes that the desire of the public to see foreign champions swept to defeat will cause his downfall unless Bowser insists he get a square shake of the dice.

"I don't care how rough Washburn is as long as he doesn't jump on my neck when I'm down," said DeGlane. "He can do anything he wishes while I'm on my feet and I shall be the last person in the world to complain.

"I am a better wrestler than Washburn, and unless he is allowed to hit me over the head with a hammer or use a shotgun I shall lick him. I can take his best punches while I'm not afraid of his face gouging.

"But if I should be knocked down I don't want Washburn to be permitted to kick me on the head or do something else that might render me unconscious.

"I know some of the fans want me licked at any cost on account of the fact I'm a Frenchman. Yet I feel that the vast majority of New England fans are fair sportsmen. They will insist that I get a fair deal. If I am not jobbed, I shall still be champion after tonight's tussle."

Washburn arrived in the Hub early this morning from Revere, where he spent the night at his training quarters. Gentleman Jack was jubilant and confident he would lift the title.

"DeGlane is doing a lot of cheap talk about his fear that he will be jobbed," said Washburn. "The Frenchman is quitting before the bout starts. He wants to have his alibi prepared so that he can squawk after I zip him from his championship throne.

"The world's heavyweight wrestling championship belongs in this country. I shall see that the title comes back here. I'll wrap DeGlane up this evening just like Jack Sharkey licked Max Schmeling, the Dutchman. Now that Sharkey has won the heavyweight boxing title, I'm going to bring the heavyweight wrestling title back to this country."

As champion, Washburn would prove a tremendous box office attraction. He has color and all kinds of crowd appeal. He has scared smashed all box office records everywhere he has appeared.

Jack Sherry, uncrowned champion, will oppose Nick Lutze in the semifinal. This will be a 30-minute time limited tussle.

Sherry hasn't met with defeat during the past 12 months. He promises to add the colorful Lutze to his long list of victims.

Joe Malcewicz, Len Macaluso, Charley Strack and every other star wrestler will be on the preliminary card.

Henri DeGlane or "Gentleman" Jack Washburn?

"It's a tossup," said Jack. "DeGlane is the better wrestler, but Washburn is rougher and stronger than the champion. If they allow Washburn to do his stuff without any interference, he'll lick any wrestler in the world. But on straight wrestling DeGlane would have the edge."

Here's What Mat Fans Think of Tonight's Bout

By GEORGE W. GRIMM

After two days of ceaseless questioning of various "men about Boston town," those who know their sports from every angle, we have found the favorite for tonight's wrestling match at Braves Field.

He is Henri Washburn. Or, if you'd rather, Jack DeGlane.

Wrestling fans are long and loud in their pickings of both contestants and we were more mixed up than a well-shaken cocktail trying to find out just which grappler was the choice of the boys.

JACK SHARKEY—Looks like DeGlane to me.

BILLY AMES—Washburn will throw him into the blooming Charles.

JIM McDONOUGH—My money's on DeGlane. (McDonough, incidentally, is a bank president.)

CHARLES REALOS—Henri has absorbed too much red wine in his time. It will do him no good.

DR. ED ORMSBY—I'll take vanilla. (He likes the Gentleman.)

GUS SONN NBERG—A couple of fair wrestlers.

DICK DUNN—Washburn will wear him down with brute force and then pin him.

BILL NUGENT—Do either of these boys play golf?

ART SHIRES—Just a pair of good .300 hitters in the N. Y. P. League.

TACK HARDWICK—Washburn would have made a great tackle.

OFFICE BOYS—Yuh, have you got any tickets.

Put them all together and they spell—headache.

GEORGE HOLLAND—Wash-burn a cinch. He's the greatest wrestler the world has ever seen. He'll take two straight falls, without taking a deep breath.

FORMER LIEUT.-GOV. EDDIE BARRY—As I said in the courthouse corridors this morning, I favor DeGlane.

JIMMY BRENNAN, GOVERNOR'S COUNCIL—I think Washburn has a good chance to smash his way to victory.

RAY BARRETT, LAWYER—If it is within the law for Washburn to punch, he'll win.

PHIL PORCELLA, MARKETMAN—Washburn will chop DeGlane down.

JOHN FORD, GOLF PRO, AT BLUE HILLS C. C.—I picked Strack to beat Washburn and missed, but I'm not missing tonight with the Frenchman.

C. F. ADAMS OF THE BRUINS—DeGlane will take the big boy from the way it sizes up to me.

NATHAN SHRIBER, ROADMAN FOR A. G. SPALDING & BROS.—Jack is the best man for the rough stuff and I guess the rough stuff goes tonight.

Boston Bankers, Beauties, Artists, Merchants Await Title Bout Gong

Henri DeGlane or "Gentleman" Jack Washburn? A representative cross-section of Boston's wrestling bugs had the all-important question regarding tonight's great match put to them today. Of eight dyed-in-the-wool fans interviewed, six picked DeGlane to retain his championship and two predicted "Gentleman" Jack would lift the crown. It may or may not be significant that the two picking Washburn are the female of the species. Here's what they think:

"I look for a close match, with DeGlane to come out on top. The champion, I believe, knows too much about wrestling for Washburn. If it were a fight, I'd pick Washburn, of course. He has the size and packs the wallop. But I'll be surprised if Henri doesn't pick him up and lay him down.

JACK SHARKEY, World's Champion

"If I were to forecast a result, I'd certainly select Mr. DeGlane. I doubt very much, indeed, that Mr. Washburn's rough tactics will prove much of a handicap for the champion. Of course, Mr. DeGlane is a much smaller man; but in my own humble opinion, he will retain his title.

ARTHUR FIEDLER, Symphony Leader

"Of course a girl isn't supposed to know a great deal about it but a good many girls know just as much if not more about the matches than the men. I pick "Gentleman" Jack to win the championship from DeGlane. Almost always my sympathies are with the smaller man, but not tonight.

EVELYN SPELLMAN, Secretary

"If you want my choice for tonight's bout, I'll give you DeGlane. But it's a hairline decision. I've watched both men in action, and if the sparks don't fly tonight, I'll be greatly surprised. I only hope I'm not forced to order the arrest of one or the other for mayhem.

MICHAEL CROWLEY, Supt. Boston Police

"I really think Mr. Washburn will take first place. He is a charming wrestler, and I think he will prove too good for Mr. DeGlane. I do not like the matches when they are too rough, and I hope that Mr. Washburn will not be too hard on the champion. I certainly would hate to have Mr. Washburn get a headlock on me.

DOROTHY DAWM, Follies Beauty

"DeGlane is my choice. I think he knows far too much real wrestling for "Gentleman" Jack, and that the latter's rough tactics will have little effect upon him. It should be a good match, and perhaps closer than I think; but if you want my honest opinion, I give Washburn only an outside chance.

WM. KENNEDY, Hillcrafts Merchant

"DeGlane. I pick him in this match and I will pick him in any match against any of the present day crop of maimen. He knows too much of real wrestling to be tricked into defeat by any peculiar stylist. But it should be close, one of the best matches in years. If Washburn wins, I'll buy a new hat for him and for Prof. Rogers.

JACK PROUTY, First National Bank

"My choice for tonight's match is Henri DeGlane. His holds should have Washburn groggy. And when "Gentleman" Jack starts his rough stuff, as he most surely will, I think he is due to receive a surprise somewhat after the fashion of a dynamite explosion. There will be plenty of action for the fans.

CAPT. BEAUPRE, State Police

$1,200,000 FOR SOX TOO HIGH, SAYS SCHUSTER

QUINN KNOWS NOTHING OF DEAL

While President Bobbie Quinn of the Boston Red Sox vehemently denies all knowledge that a group of Massachusetts sportsmen are seeking control of the Boston Red Sox, Winfield A. Schuster of the Govenor's Council and 26-year-old son of the late Walter A. Schuster, wealthy sponsor of the Blakstone Valley League, is equally positive that negotiations are underway to buy the Sox.

Since the high contracting parties are equally positive, it must be assumed that Schuster and his associates are dealing directly with the Ohio post which now owns the club, and sum being the case the Sox may go under the hammer at the end of the season.

Schuster and two associates, whose names are held secret, are ready to purchase the Sox, but not at the price of $1,200,000 which Schuster declares the Red Sox were quoted to him.

But that the Masachusetts sportsmen are interested in a financial way is indicated by the fact that Schuster declared his organization is ready to sink some $200,000 in restocking the club with ball players.

"The price now asked is ridiculous," Schuster stated, "when consider that a controlling interest in the Phillies can be had for as little as $200,000.

"If we obtained control of the club, we would have to pay plenty for the property and about a half a million dollars more on the team itself."

KEPT HOME NINE STRONG

The late Walter E. Schuster, owner of the famous woolen mills bearing his name and organizer of the Blackstone Valley League, was a King Midas of baseball.

It was nothing for Walter Schuster, Sr., to import major league players at fancy prices to keep the local pennant in East Douglas. At one time he brought the entire Holy Cross baseball team to impersonate the home heroes.

President Bob Quinn of the Red Sox firmly denies that he has had any offers from Mr. Schuster or his associates to purchase the Sox.

COMES BACK FOR MUSSOLINI

Il Duce called him a bad boy and sent him back here to fight for the honor of Italy (not to mention a few liras for himself). So here you see Primo Carnera in his first start of his new campaign. He is making a present of a right hand to the body to Jack Gross of Philadelphia (left). Gross took too many of these, so the Man Mountain got the duke in the seventh. Technical kayo. Looked on the up and up, the experts said.

STAR'S LIFE IS SAVED BY WIFE

Washington, July 21 (AP)—Carl Reynolds, outfielder for the Washington Nationals, has his wife to thank for saving him from an embarrassing and threatening situation.

Since July 4 Reynold's upper and lower teeth have been wired together to hasten the knitting of his jawbone, cracked when he was slugged by Bill Dickey, New York Yankee catcher, in a now historic encounter.

Riding in a cab with his wife, Reynolds became ill and choked. Stopping the cab under a street light, Mrs. Reynolds quickly cut the restricting wires with a pair of manicure scissors—and Carl could breathe again.

Irish Horsemen to Show in Boston

New York, July 21 (AP)—The Irish Free State horse show team has sent word it will compete in the national horse show at Madison Square Garden November 9-15 and in the Boston show October 25-31. The Irish also are expected again to enter the military jumping contests.

Klein Gets Two Homers

Pittsburgh, July 21 (US)—Chuck Klein's 27th and 28th homers of the season aided the Phils in conquering the Pirates, 6 to 2.

Golf Heart-Breakers Near Boston

No. 9 at Tedesco

Granted that they do not, as a rule, pay off on drives, yet, at the ninth hole at the Tedesco Country Club, a well hit, accurately placed drive certainly simplifies matters for the linksman. And, of course, the opposite is true when drives are poorly hit or off line.

It is a par four hole, measuring 340 yards. The tee is on the top of a high hill and the drop is so sharp that from the back trees, which are always played in tournaments, it is impossible to see any of the fairway, except just short of the green.

Down the left side of the fairway are out of bound markers and the right side is guarded by a pond, beyond which is marshy rough. On the left is another pond about opposite to which is a large rock.

The direction and velocity of the wind are important factors in playing this hole. At various times the best players have used from drivers to No. 4 irons from the tee. The drive should be played to the left so as to come to rest short of the pond, from where it is a simple shot to get home. If the wind is against and heavy, a driver should be used, but under ordinary conditions it is either a No. 1 or No. 2 iron shot. With a trailing wind, of better than average velocity, a No. 3 or even a No. 4 iron is the shot to play in order to keep out of trouble.

If a drive is on the right side of the fairway, there is danger of the ball going into the pond, but if it remains on playable terra firma, it is a blind shot to the green, for there is a large rock, just beyond the pond, which shuts off the view.

There are many fine golf holes on the new Tedesco layout but the present No. 9 is by far the most interesting.

CORBETT MAY JOIN GOTHAM BOXING BOARD

By DAVIS J. WALSH

New York, July 21 (INS)—While press and public united in a tirade that made a mockery of its officials and held them up to scorn, the name of James J. Corbett, former heavyweight champion of the world, came forward today to be prominently mentioned as the savior of New York boxing.

This was one development in the outburst of abuse, both overt and covert, that has followed in the wake of unpopular decisions in the Sharkey-Schmeling and Chocolate-Berg fights. Another concerns a Mr. Tunney, who, according to legend, was to be appointed to the boxing commission. They won't appoint him because they can't. A third development has to do with Mr. James Bronson, celebrated for the fact that Mr. Tunney used to know him. He also is a candidate but his case is very simple.

The fourth development deals with the probability that James A. Farley, campaigning manager for Franklin D. Roosevelt, presidential nominee, will retire from the chairmanship of the Boxing Commission after the election in November. I have reason to believe that he would do so now, since his positions are just a little incongruous, if not grotesque; but he has no wish to withdraw until his successor is considered, agreed upon and made ready.

MRS. HARPER IS DEFEATED

Manchester, July 21 (AP)—Mrs. Lawrence A. Harper of Oakland, Calif., Wightman Cup player and top-seeded in the Essex County Club womens' invitation tennis tournament, today was eliminated by Josephine Cruickshank of Santa Ana, Calif., in a bruising semi-final match, 4—6, 8—6, 6—3.

Mrs. Harper, who returned from England late last week, displayed her usual skill in the opening set, but the 14-game second set wearied her and she was easily overcome in the deciding play.

PRIMO KAYOES JACK GROSS

Ebbets Field, Brooklyn, N. Y., July 21 (US)—The old adage about giving the dog a bad name worked out again at Ebbets Field when Elphantine Primo Carnera scored a seven-round knockout over Jack Gross, Philadelphia southpaw.

Gross went down in the seventh under a thudding tattoo of lefts and rights to the head, after taking a vicious body and head beating.

At eight, the groggy Philadelphian staggered up to resume fighting, but Referee Arthur Donovan mercifully waved him away.

Gross went down from exhaustion as much as anything, although the punches that boomed against his head at the finish were jolts likely to floor anything.

MR. BOSTON

By JACK CONWAY

YOU'LL GET YOUR answer on just how good a wrestler "Gentleman" Jack Washburn is when he battles Henri DeGlane for the world's heavyweight championship at Braves Field tonight.

Washburn has been a "One Man Riot." It has required the aid of Supt. Mike Crowley's police force to maintain order when Washburn has been in action.

"Gentleman" Jack has become the greatest drawing card in wrestling.

I believe Paul Bowser is sincere when he says DeGlane will receive a fair deal tonight. Bowser has done a great deal to build up wrestling, and no wrestler has ever been obliged to battle against loaded dice at any of his shows.

The better man will win tonight. Perhaps Washburn is your idea of the better man, or perhaps you prefer DeGlane.

On paper it shapes up as the outstanding wrestling bout of the year. I look for Braves Field to be jammed to capacity when the champion and American challenger sweep into action.

LEO LARIVEE of Waterbury, Conn., didn't do any cheering when Odonne Piazza announced he would send the New England diamond studded championship belt to Premier Mussolini if he comes through with a win at an Argonne A. A. show at Fenway Park on next Tuesday night.

Larivee now holds the title belt, and was obliged to agree to risk it Tuesday night before the match could be arranged. The Connecticut warrior says that in the event he loses, he should receive an opportunity to regain the famous trophy. If Piazza wins and sends the belt to Mussolini, Larivee could not realize his ambition.

WILLIAM F. CAREY was to sit in at a meeting of the board of directors of the Boston Garden today. Carey is satisfied with the progress made at the North Station sport palace by Dick Dunn.

ERNIE SCHAAF IS training at his own gym on Cambridge st. for his 15-round bout with Paulino, which will be held at the Garden Bowl on Long Island on next Monday night. Paulino has never been stopped. Schaaf will try to break the Basque's record.

NAT BOR K. O'S WHITTLE

San Francisco, July 21—In the tryouts for the American Olympic boxing team here Nat Bor of Fall River, Mass., national A. A. U. 135-pound champ, won over Edward Whittle, Honolulu, by technical knockout in the second.

Bor outclassed his foe all the way. Whittle was in bad shape when the referee halted the bout.

1,250,000 TRACK FANS WILL SEE OLYMPIC GAMES

GATE WILL GO OVER MILLION DOLLARS

By FRANK G. MENKE

Los Angeles, July 21 (INS)—The something which has been termed "the grand Olympic flop" now seems destined to go roaring down the gulches of time as a colossal success.

The East may be financially apathetic to what the girls and boys of athletic skill will do in these parts between July 30 and Aug. 15; the Middle West and the South may assume a "what of it?" air.

But California and way stations are rallying in a way that is astonishing and figures compiled to date indicate that at least 1,250,000 persons will pay close to $1,500,000 to gaze upon the gladiators of the world as they disport under California skies.

In the beginning of things—eight years ago when the site award was made to Los Angeles—the extravaganza promised to be the most successful and certainly the most glamorous in all history.

But then came an economic crisis which boded ill for all such ideas and the aspect was bleary. But all those gloomy alterations of the original picture have been changed back to rose-tints and the tenth Olympiad of modern times will go over with a yip-yipping hurrah.

With something like 00 hoof-bred and foreign athletes encamped now in the quaint but magnificent Olympic village and with hundreds more rolling westward, this Olympiad perhaps will establish an all-time record for the number of contestants, events, attendance and receipts.

The city of Los Angeles, which appropriated a $1,000,000 bond issue to insure the Olympics for this city, has spent the money in various ways—but all of them for permanent civic assets.

Its cash outlay has been heavy, of course, when the Olympics are done the city not only will have the glory of having put in the greatest athletic show of all time, but will have new property values that will practically represent the appropriation for bonds.

Overtraining Is the Cause of Failures

By LAWSON ROBERTSON
Chief Coach American Olympic Team

Palo Alto, Cal., July 21—Roaming the continent, and coming in contact with a vast number of athletic tutors, I find a radical difference in the methods of training athletes. Most of them are rather harshly opposed to my own ideas.

These fellows in the main, bear down rather heavily on their boys.

They have hard and stern rules and insist upon applying these to all their pupils regardless. There is little elasticity, and this is different than my own way. Whether the, are right and I am wrong—or vice versa—I cannot determine.

I do not attempt to enforce any diet on my boys. If they have been accustomed to eating corned beef and cabbage, sauer kraut and other heavy foods before they come to me they can continue to do so. They developed and got along nicely as high school athletes on such fare. So why change it?

Spinach! is a good thing for anyone—especially athletes. But, if my boys don't care for it, they don't have to eat it. If they like coffee, they can have it. If they smoke, they can continue to do so, but of course in moderation.

BRAVES BACK AT WIGWAM TOMORROW

Now that the period of mourning with the luckless Sox is temporarily over, Boston baseball fans can drag out the Easter spirit to welcome home the Braves.

The Tribesmen are in town for a series with the Giants, which opens tomorrow. They arrived from Harrisburg, Pa., where they exhibited against their newly purchased "farm" product.

The Braves broke even in 22 games out West, and are still in a good spot in the league race. This coming duel with the punctured Giants will help tell how the National League wind is blowing.

Saturday the Braves will honor Bobby Brown of Hull and there will be no census taken in that town on grounds of complete absence of the populace.

M'GRAW TELLS OF MURRAY'S GREAT CATCH

By EDWARD J. NEIL

New York, July 21 (AP)—It was late in the National League campaign of 1912 and the Giants, led by a swashbuckling, fighting fury named John McGraw, were locked in a bitter stretch duel for the pennant with the Pittsburgh Pirates.

They warred through a final crucial series in Pittsburgh and the Giants came down to the ninth inning of this final game leading by a single run. Victory there meant enough margin to nurse through the final dash to the flag. Then something went wrong.

The Pirates rallied, filled the bases. Two were out. A storm was sweeping in over Forbes Field. It was getting dark. Christy Mathewson fiddled in the pitcher's box and waited, tired, for the help of the storm and the gloom that would make his fadeaway a phantom bit of horsehide slipping past the knees of the final batter.

The wind was whipping in across the outfield, and as Matty took one last look behind him he could scarcely see his outfielders against the storm clouds swooping down.

He wound up. The batter lunged. He met the ball, a screaming liner that flashed to the right of second base and out toward the darkness of right center.

RUNNERS ON WAY

"The runners on those bases poured over the plate," said John McGraw as he sat back in his chair in the Giants' business office reminiscing. "Matty's head dropped and he turned his back. I started to turn away.

"Suddenly there came the terrific crash of the first bolt of lightning as the storm broke full on. For the brief flash of a second it lit up the field, and there outlined against the sizzag flame, his face contorted, leaping high into the air, was our right fielder, Red Murray, the ball just setting into his glove."

And that, sighed John McGraw, was the greatest and most dramatic play he ever saw on a baseball diamond.

Wandering back over the years with the most colorful leader in baseball history, you feel nothing but wonder that the white-haired, gentlemanly, soft-spoken man of 60, who sits so contentedly in the business office now, could have generated in his heyday the truculence and lust of battle for which he was famous.

When a decision was close, and the umpire hesitated or ruled against him, there would come thru human bolt from the bench, McGraw. Out of the dugout would pour the bench-warmers, a phalanx about him, while his warriors stormed in from the field to shout at his side.

In Chicago and Cincinnati particularly, he was an even bet in the old days to promote at least a couple of riots each series.

But he knew how to avoid banishment, and the threat of suspension, while creating the impression that murder was about to be done.

KID M'COY IS GIVEN A BIG SENDOFF

Yells from 800 convicts echoed in the San Quentin Prison cell blocks today as "Kid" McCoy, the former internationally famous prize fighter, discarded the garb of convict No. 40716. The prison's most popular inmate was being released.

"And don't come back!" one convict shouted.

That was a strange blast in McCoy's ears. Because crowds, many times larger than today's 5000, applauded him many, many years ago and had always demanded he "come back again." He was one of flatiana's most colorful figures.

Parole papers in hand, McCoy bade "farewell forever" to prison officials, guards and convict "trusties." He will work in the service department of an automobile plant.

Following conviction in Los Angeles, McCoy entered prison April 11, 1925, to serve a 20-year sentence for killing Mrs. Theresa Mors, his sweetheart.

He must serve six years on parole.

McCoy, fitted once again in civilian clothes, remarked he was ashamed of himself and now wants to do something for humanity.

Girl About Town

—By ALYCE SIEMENS—

Who Cares?

I'm thinking of the little things
That always filled my life with you.
Your love theme in my heart still rings
When closer to each other we grew.
But life has changed all that, my sweet—
Last night we snubbed each other on the street!

—J. E. Y.

On the Old Snoop Out:

Mrs. James Hooley about ready to wave farewell to Beacon Hill for Hollywood to reside with her ailing mother . . . Wellesley's Ed. Madden operated on yesterday morn at Faulkner Hospital . . . Wonder if West Medford's Maxine Rutman entered that bathing-poss photo in that win-a-trip to the cinema's Heartbreak land contest knowing that the judges couldn't help but notice her! . . . It's sure an eyeful for any judge to gaze upon and dream about! . . . Norman Edminovits is not much of a golfer when it's just for fun, but how his game improves and his business intuition gets going when the caddy fees are up! . . . Lloyd Tadlin spent hours, after riding Norman in his sedan from the Hotel Bay of Naples in Maine, trying to read the stories Norman had written on his car windows with a candle snitched from a tea-room . . . Boy's stories, they were! . . . Dorchester's Julius Soble, running for re-election as Ward 14's Rep., is a 20-pound bachelor, with little hair and less golf ability . . . But such a way with Ladies Fair! . . . As a prexy preferring voting ones from his own district . . . Grasp it?

Other Snoops:

Short that Ranny Weeks expected to movie-motion in has now developed into an eight reel picture . . . To feature the stage's Taylor Holmes and Anne Southland along with Boston's baritoning sensation . . . With his NBC and Columbia records contracts about set —according to Nanny's letter leaking to Auntie Siemens . . . Former Hub's Mrs. Sol (Etta Feinberg) Goldstein here from Syracuse, N. Y., on the Cape learning lullabies and latest tiny-knitting wrinkles for the babe who'll arrive late in the summer! . . . Medico Joseph C. Henken of Everett and Sarah Yater of Fitchburg who suddenly made up their minds were shackled and bound Sunday and now honeymoon cooing in Maine's woods . . .

Hobbies:

Cambridge's Frank Hayward has one that those 20 kids from the Nantasket summer colony think is cool . . . It's his giving them a swell speedboating every other night at sundown . . . Prof. Robert E. Rogers must nurse and coddle his pet pipe—even while interviewing . . . That mysterious Pretty One who used to work as a governess in Newton is now living at Hyannis . . . Still collecting different photo-poses of Garbo . . . She has over 500 in her collection now . . . And she began her Garbo-worshipping long before the Great One discovered that silence is platinum and worth $10,000 per six days . . . This mysterious maiden so resembles Garbo that Hyannis dwellers were prettily thrilled up when she first invaded the Cape—they actually believed it was Garbo incognito! . . .

Will They Exercise!

"Gentlemen may prefer blondes but they're going to get brunettes . . . The switch to the brunette type is due in part to an increased indulgence in athletics . . . outdoor life . . . bringing the stronger type of woman to be the reigning type of the future" . . . All this mouthed by Dr. Charles F. Pabst, chief dermatologist at Brooklyn's Greenpoint Hospital . . . Hooray! . . . At last a break! . . . And now will Beantown's best brunettes hunt about for their rusty golf sticks and spiked brogans!

"Ladies Out!"

That's what "Gentleman" Jack Washburn's fiancee declared when the Beau Brummell wrestler mauled her his newspaper clippings last week for her to paste in his stage scrap-book . . . Deddy Dawes takes good care of all of his write-ups and stories . . . But how she declared herself when Jack told her to be sure to have his recent photos of him learning the latest Broadway steps and teacup tilting . . . Since there were pretty ones sharing the photos with her luck and since it's an iron clad rule of Dibble's that no girl's photo but hers goes in that huge scrap-book, that settles the argument! . . . We're going to be on the peek-out for any ever enthusiastic wrestling fan-ettes who might try to get in the "Gentleman's" path out there at Braves Field tonight . . . There'll be plenty fireworks, we'll promise . . . And we're going to watch out too for those girls and cent stuffed town who never miss an opening night or a celebrity-attended event, during the winter months, and who should be at the field tonight to do their bit toward putting over the Boston American's Christmas Basket Fund's wrestling show . . . Times are tough for lots of folks, we'll admit, but there's always someone just around that corner who's in a more sorry plight than you are . . . So join up now for that Parade of Big Hearts to Braves Field tonight . . . Forward march!

M-G-M Will Film 'Good Earth'

Los Angeles, July 21—The enthusiastic readers of Pearl Buck's great novel, "Good Earth," can take heart. Irving Thalberg himself told me that when it goes into production, six months hence, he will treat it just as he has treated all of Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's big productions, "Grand Hotel," "Strange Interlude," etc. He will give it the proper background.

That means China. No one can make a real Chinese story with a Hollywood background. Neither can you disguise American actors, no matter how clever they are, to make them look as if they were Orientals. The fascinating roles of Wong and his wife will be played by Chinese artists.

Count out the Lasky-Paramour productions as Paramount releases. Mr. Darmour and Mr. Paramount are saying farewell to each other. And because it's necessary to replace these Darmour Westerns in a hurry, Paramount is turning to good old Zane Grey. They must have, in their files, at least two dozen stories, some of which have been filmed in silent version, and some of which have never yet seen the light of a screen. The first Zane Grey number is "Heritage of the Desert," starring Randolph Scott.

Hollywood Chatter

Terrible luck. Ethel Barrymore sprained her ankle and a very bad sprain it is, too, just as they were starting "Rasputin." It's important for her to finish on schedule because she has a stage engagement waiting for her in New York, but she won't be able to work for several days. Norma Talmadge is opening at the Paramount Theater in New York August 12 with George Jessel in support. In spite of all the entreaties of her friends in Hollywood to open their sketch here she would be too nervous. Mr. Jessel will arrive here later to start rehearsals on their act which I am told went over very well in Chicago.

Lupe Out of Café

Lupe Velez, with flashing eyes and the independent manner, will not play the lead in "Hypnotized." Lupe says she would have been glad to do it but just a little question of salary prevented. If Lupe doesn't make a picture soon she says she is going back to New York because she doesn't want a vacation. Not even 14 fur coats and 15 diamond bracelets can compensate for an interesting job, she says. Maria Alba, who went to the South Seas with Douglas Fairbanks and played the lead in his picture, was signed yesterday by Mr. Fairbanks for the feminine lead in "Hypnotized." His picture will be released about the same time as the Fairbanks epic, which will give this young lady a good break.

Miss Stanwyck Sings in Film

Barbara Stanwyck, fascinating screen star, will sing in "The Purchase Price," which comes to the Paramount and Uptown tomorrow.

Playing the role of a night club entertainer whose voice and personal beauty are the toast of the city, Miss Stanwyck finds in the part a strange parallel to the early beginnings of her own career. As a member of the chorus in a revue on the Strand Roof in New York, she sang as well as danced nightly, and later, when she played the feminine lead in "Burlesque," she sang again.

A new song, not yet published, will be the star's number in "The Purchase Price." The words are tied in with the theme of the picture. Titled "Take Me Away," the lyrics were written by Sidney Clare and Charles Tobias, and the music by Peter Tinturin.

Exeter Theater

John Barrymore in "State's Attorney," and Lew Ayres and Mae Clarke in "Night World" are the attractions at the Exeter for the remainder of the week.

Forecasts Great Pictures in Schedule for the New Screen Year

By HARLEIGH SCHULTZ

Adolph Zukor's forecast of Paramount product for the new film year inspires optimism. Not only in the picture industry's future, but in the future of business generally. During an interview he outlined to us the major features on his company's schedule. It is a big program built upon basically sound principles, and the array of talent he reveals, in story, in direction, in casts, makes us feel that it will be Paramount's big year, and that the Zukor confidence will help put the industry in the front for prosperity's return.

* * *

The Paramount chief gives the frankest, clearest, most telling talk on show business and films, to which we have ever listened. He is an ideal subject for an interview. His long life in pictures gives him authority and rich knowledge. His manner is vigorous, incisive. He talks to the point. He dodges no issues. His face, his personality, his voice, G. Ralph Branton beget fullest faith in himself as a man of genius and action. Talking with him, we learn he was once, years ago, a boxer; and we are not then surprised at his ability to get into strong, and give-and-take in the peppiest sort of interview, with all sorts of queries sprung at him, and as readily answered.

Answering our question, he declares camera action is again to have its day.

"Present day writers are injecting more action into their stories," he tells us. "The new Chevalier feature, 'Love Me Tonight,' not yet released, is 60 per cent action. We are getting away from over-much dialogue. No longer will the cameras be cramped.

"The ideal talkie?

"It is the talking motion picture in which dialogue is minimized, and used chiefly to key up the motivation. Today the men who produced action pictures are coming into their own again."

The very calmness of Mr. Zukor in his statement of fundamental changes wrought in the Paramount methods of Hollywood, his sincerity and confident assurance, tingle you like a cold shower on a hot day. New things are to come out of Hollywood, as revolutionary as the advent of sound to the silver sheet. The industry is solid as Gibraltar.

"The industry is going forward," he says. "Nothing will stop it, nothing can stop it."

He hasn't any fear of competition by foreign films.

"Hollywood is a great institution," he says. "It cannot be reproduced in London, or Berlin, or elsewhere. Hollywood will live, because it has made itself great. It is unique; it has no duplicate.

"Hollywood can make a Chinese picture better than it can be made in China. So Hollywood fears no rivals.

"As to Hollywood pictures in foreign countries, we know the peoples of those countries prefer American pictures. The only thing that can hurt us is legislative action in those countries to hamper exhibition of our films."

The Paramount chief believes story, direction, cast, are almost equally important; but if he has to make a choice, he picks the story as supreme.

"I put the writer first," he says. "And we are getting good stories, and will continue to, so long as brains are brains."

Material to fill a book, in all he says, in this interview. This master of the House That Shadows Built, a magician who applied his art in the building of his business, is the finest mouthpiece the film industry could have. He was worthy of the splendid gathering at the Copley-Plaza, engineered by G. Ralph Branton, Publix chief in New England, in honor of the distinguished picture pioneer.

Mr. Branton, as master of ceremonies, proved himself gifted with power to talk pictures, after the manner of "Pop" Zukor. It is to his credit also that the "spread" was entertaining in every way—but most of all in the ringing speech of Mayor Curley, and his amazingly direct and forceful address of President Zukor.

Jaren Morley in "The Washington Masquerade," coming to Loew's State tomorrow.

Guy Maier is to give a series of four Saturday morning concerts in Jordan Hall next autumn.

SWEET KAREN

Vallee at Met Tomorrow

To the Metropolitan tomorrow come Rudy Vallee and his Connecticut Yankees. Because of previous engagements for Vallee and his co-stars, this bill runs for six days only.

"Madame Racketeer," the feature picture, is the story of a Countess (Alison Skipworth) who at one time was much in demand by the police of several cities. She bids the warden of a prison farewell and gives him an antique watch as a token of her esteem. At the same time she picks his pocket. Out in the world as a few men whom the "countess" has known and who are desirous of never again seeing her. But she manages to get in touch with them one by one until she has fleeced each of them. At length she finds her husband (Richard Bennett), proprietor of a hotel. There, also, she finds her two grown daughters, one of whom, Evelyn Knapp, is in love with John Breeden, the town banker, and the other of whom, Gertrude Messinger, is infatuated with George Raft, a "city slicker." The wily confidence woman fails in love all over again, this time with her own husband and her own children.

U. S. APPEALS TO WAR VETERANS FOR ECONOMY

Washington, July 21 (INS)—The first step by the federal government to form a national policy for veterans' relief was taken today when letters went to the heads of all national veteran's organizations asking that they make complete recommendations for drastic economies in future handlings of veterans' affairs.

Representative McDuffie, Democrat, of Alabama, chairman of the House section of a congressional joint committee formed under the terms of the Economy Bill, dispatched the letters following a conference with Brig.-Gen. Frank Hines, administrator of veterans' affairs.

McDuffie pointed out that more than $860,000,000 has been spent since the war on pensions and other benefits for ex-soldiers, with the bill mounting each year, and that scientific formation of a policy for the future is essential to keep this item from swallowing too great a percentage of government revenue.

Plane Fights Forest Fire With Chemical

Southampton, Ct., July 21 (AP)—An airplane sprayed chemicals over Waterbury Mountain today in an effort to check a forest fire, believed to have started from a cigarette dropped from another plane. Scores of unemployed men also fought the blaze, which had burned over a square mile of timber. Several farm buildings were endangered.

ROOSEVELT TO FIGHT HOOVER ON SEAWAY

Albany, N. Y., July 21 (INS)—Having challenged the good faith and accuracy of President Hoover, Gov. Franklin D. Roosevelt squared away for a battle royal today with the Government for refusing to agree on New York's share of the power development cost prior to signing the seaway treaty.

The Democratic presidential nominee will ignore President Hoover in the future so far as the treaty is concerned, and will carry his fight to the Senate.

He is planning a personal appearance later in the summer before the Senate sub-committee to demand a "square deal" for New York before the treaty is ratified.

TO BE CAMPAIGN ISSUE

Governor Roosevelt intends to speak "straight from the shoulder" regarding the St. Lawrence treaty. He feels that New York was needlessly snubbed by the government while the treaty was in process of negotiation, and that official Washington "ran out" on promises it had made to the state.

The Governor will make the treaty one of the issues of the presidential campaign. He is not opposed to navigation development of the St. Lawrence, but he vigorously insists that New York's share of the power development cost should have been determined before the treaty was signed.

He fears the federal government may jockey the state into a position where it will be unable to produce cheap electrical power for homes and industries.

DISPUTE HOOVER'S WORD

Following a two-hour conference with Governor Roosevelt, the power authority made public a communication which challenged statements made by President Hoover regarding the treaty negotiations.

Two weeks ago the Governor sent a telegram to the President suggesting a personal conference at the White House to settle New York's share of the power project.

In rejecting Roosevelt's suggestion, the President said the treaty negotiations "have been under way for nearly three years."

The state power authority took direct issue with this statement by the President. It charged documentary records prove that the negotiations have been under way for only eight months.

Survivor of Last Man's Club Drinks to Vacant Chairs

Stillwater, Minn., July 21 (AP)—Keeping faith with its tradition, the Last Man's Club, reduced by deaths to one survivor, rallied today for probably the last time.

Tonight in the presence of 33 chairs draped in black set about a table whose centerpiece will be a bottle of rare old Burgundy, Capt. Charles Lockwood of Chamberlain, S. D., the survivor, will call the roll of the 34 members of the club.

Though Lockwood expects to live many more years, he admits the annual visit without the presence of his Civil War comrades of Company B, 1st Minnesota Infantry, is becoming more of a task each July 21. Last winter he was ill for several months.

So, after he carries out the club ritual tonight, he may close the records forever.

WILL DRINK TOAST

Following the roll call Lockwood will drink a toast to his departed companions of the first battle of Bull Run, fought July 21, 1861—in water. The wine, set aside at the first reunion of the veterans in 1885, fulfilled its destiny in 1930 when for the first time Lockwood met alone. That was soon after the funeral of his old friend, Peter Hall of Atwater, Minn., "the next to the last man." The beverage was designated in 1885 as the toast drink for the last survivor.

The wine is being preserved partly because Lockwood has no fondness for it and partly because he wants the historical society to which he gave the bottle to preserve the liquor.

DRINK VANISHES

But he brought a vial with him and he expects to fill it from the bottle as he did in 1930. Last spring on a visit to Washington he showed it to President Hoover and a girl reporter. Later he found the vial empty.

"I know that the President didn't drink any of it but I can't tell about that girl," he laughed.

$40,000 CARGO OF SILK STOLEN

New York, July 21 (AP)—The driver and helper of a motor truck of Barnwell Brothers, Burlington, North Carolina, were kidnaped today and their truck and 50 cases of silk, valued at $40,000, were stolen.

The kidnaping occurred outside the offices of a trucking company where the silk was taken for delivery here. The driver and his helper were released on Long Island and the robbers drove off with the truck.

Woman With Money in Two Banks Is Put on Boston's 'Dole List'

By RUTH MUGGLEBEE

(This is the ninth of the series of stories on charity swindlers of Boston.)

This month last year $378,334.60 was expended in welfare relief—more than half a million was willingly given to those who made claim of distress and want.

Few questions were asked; only those that were in formal compliance with the law.

But that amount this year has been doubled. More than one million will be spent this month for the same cause and purpose.

Only this month there will be only a few receiving aid not rightfully entitled to it. The hand of the law is fast reaching out and "fingering them." They are being weeded out and every day brings new information at the Hawkins st. headquarters of the welfare department.

Take this case for instance:

A partial check-up on the family showed the wife to have in her own name in a savings bank $1002. Within the past few days, Special Officer Ernest F. Fanjoy, attached to the department from police headquarters, has received communication showing that this woman in her own name had an account in another bank. This total, not as large as the first, is more than $200 and is a balance after which money had been withdrawn periodically.

DEPOSITS DISCOVERED

The couple live alone, the husband swore in his affidavit, and although he had been unemployed, a son by his wife's first marriage was aiding them.

"But he cannot continue to help us," his formal application read, "and so I must have aid."

The staff visitor heard this man's story and aid was given him last Jan. 9. The relief continued only for a short time, for discovery of a bank account, now attached, automatically stopped the aid.

And so the wife in her resourcefulness, turned to the other bank account, and made periodic withdrawals as her needs demanded.

Officer Fanjoy expects to go into court within a few days to apply for warrants for several such "welfare chiselers." His preparations are practically complete and his information detailed.

He has a full transcript of the bank accounts of these frauds, their applications duly sworn to and signed and the account of the aid given them.

NOBODY ASKED HIM

Larceny charges will be placed against all of them and the warrants will be sought on such grounds.

"Nobody asked me if I had a bank account," a man told Officer Fanjoy when his aid had been stopped and he was called to account for his hidden assets.

After a half hour's interview at which I was present, the man finally yielded the information that the bank account of $490 in the Wiley Union bank was his and that the funds were within his reach all the time he was receiving aid from the city.

"But nobody asked me if I owned money in a bank," he said shamefully.

His aid was first granted Jan. 11, 1932, and was automatically stopped when the account was attached by the city law department, June 8.

He came running to headquarters to find out why. And then Officer Fanjoy told him the story.

"People like you, who have money, ought to know you have no right in asking of the city aid and depriving other families of help," he said. "You can read, can't you?"

Applicant said he could and that he did read the application, but intimated that the contents of the application made no impression other than that they constituted a series of questions.

Officer Fanjoy repeated several times the question on the blank pertinent to real estate and bank holdings. And finally the man acquiesced and admitted that he did take it falsely.

He readily admitted his willingness to make restitution of $125 which he owed the city. He begged off court prosecution. But Officer Fanjoy told him that the last word rested with the city law department.

The man added that his wife didn't own a penny of the more than $4000—that it all belonged to his wife's mother, who placed it in the joint account to keep it away from her sons.

However, Special Officer Fanjoy is conducting a thorough investigation of the case, now that the city law department has attached all the accounts in the names of these two women, jointly and individually.

Several bank accounts totaling several thousands of dollars are involved.

EDITORS FLAY UNJUST LAWS

San Francisco, July 21 (AP)—After firing a broadside at discrimination against the press by national legislators, National Editorial Association delegates prepared to continue on to Los Angeles from here today.

Among the instances of alleged discrimination cited were increased second-class postage, refusal to remove government competition in the sale of stamped envelopes and allowing radio broadcasts of lotteries while postal regulations prohibit newspapers from handling them.

THIS IS LIFE

TROUBLE IS, WE'RE ALL TOO FED UP, TOO MUCH HAPPENS TOO OFTEN

By ROBERT E. ROGERS

PROF. ROGERS

I AM INCLINED to think that it would be a fine idea if the greater part of the United States followed Roxy's experiment and closed up for a month or two. For the first time in several years the great Roxy auditorium in New York is dark. The ballet, that has not had a single vacation in all that time, is now sleeping late o'mornings and lounging about instead of doing Degas 16 hours a day.

The ushers have taken off their corsets and aiguillettes and riding boots and spurs and rapiers and come back to normal American posture—i. e. shoulders slightly round, stomach protruded, hands dangling out of sleeves a bit too short, Adam's apple rising out of a low collar, chin held out ready to "take it"—our familiar sidewalk or subway stance.

Too Much Happening Too Often

But it is not for long. Everything is being done over. A new revolving suspension bridge stage fit to carry the most elaborate effects, a new corps de ballet rehearsing mammoth spectacles, and a whole new division of ushers—on horses and roller skates—drilling in brigade formations.

As the French proverb has it, the more it changes, the more it is the same thing. That is, apparently, the principle of the moratorium.

It's a good idea, all the same. I wish some scientific instrument could have caught and measured the sigh of relief America gave when it read that the Congress had adjourned—or, rather, not so much adjourned as picked up its marbles and sneaked home. You will remember that somebody asked Napoleon what would happen when he died. He answered that Europe would give a big heartfelt "Pouf!" Our imaginary ex-sufflicator would probably have been broken by the breath we drew.

We're getting stale. Too much happening too often. Too little breathing space between things happening. Too relentless a continuity. The keen edge of the appetite is dulled long since. We are beginning to feel like the actors in "Shore Acres," who had to eat a real turkey dinner eight times a week. For a good deal of our news and our reading and our entertainment has all the steady relentless standardized repetitive quality of that turkey dinner.

You have observed the anguish of the radio announcer if for any reason there is a tiny hiatus between one program and another. Either he enumerates rapidly the joys to come or else he keeps "egging you on," so to speak, warning you that the new program is like the up-turn, just around the corner, and that you will miss something if you turn the dial. As a matter of fact, the chances are that you are too lazy to leave your chair and so he wins out, otherwise this grim determination not to leave a single moment of the air uncontaminated would probably make you turn off the accursed thing altogether.

Why Not Gag the Cabinet, Too?

Some day some station with bright ideas will announce, "We are declaring a moratorium for three hours, during which you are at liberty not to listen to the radio at all if you prefer, but at the end of that time we shall offer you the greatest feature of the air—Herbie Hoover and Frankie Roosevelt in their rapid-fire cross-talk comedy and singing skit, entitled, 'There's a long wet way winding from Detroit to Montreal.'"

And believe me, that is about the only kind of appearance that will stir the people out of their apathy this summer. There is about the same general anticipation of Mr. Hoover's acceptance address as there is in the plans for next-year's exposition in Chicago. Mr. Mills in old "Funnel Hall," as we say so fondly in Boston—and Mr. Hurley in Columbus got the old-die-hard Republican papers all haired up but apparently no one else. If the board of strategy in Washington is wise, it will tie the Cabinet up for the remainder of the summer and not let anybody connected with the administration utter a peep.

After Labor Day will be time enough to cry havoc and unloose the dogs of war. I know, of course, that 10 weeks is a long time for the faithful to live at their own expense until someone can crash the campaign treasury. But, after all, one can sleep on the beach. Clothing is more of an encumbrance than a necessity. And hot dogs and pop are cheap. The orators can stand it till the campaign breaks. It will be good training, too, because all signs seem to indicate that the campaign itself may have to be financed on a hot dog basis. Let's forget it till then.

New Things Too Much Like Old

The September magazines are already on the news-stands while the presses are beginning to grind out the Christmas covers and the story about Santa Claus and the little girl in the flannel nighty who pulls an automatic on him—the modern child!

No new summer shows and so no new music. The bands are going back for their song hits to the dear dead days when Newton Baker was being talked of for the nomination. If the studios went off the air, except between the hours 8 p. m. and 12 midnight, think with what an appetite for the latest advertising would we spin the dials then!

Mr. Fiedler out on the Esplanade reports that the depression audiences prefer sad music. It makes them happier. Perfectly good psychology. A German woman once told me that in the years after the armistice the favorite author in Germany was Dostoievsky, the Russian masochist. His unhappiness helped the German people to bear theirs. On that principle, I suppose, the more political speeches we have the happier we shall be. Only, Mr. Hoover will have to admit that all is for the worst in the worst of all possible worlds.

If the world would only stop spinning—just for a little!

30,000 Cheer Ely at Big Fort Devens Review

STAR BOARDER AND BRIDE IN LOVE SUIT

Wife Is Named by Landlady as Thief of Young Navy Recruiting Officer's Love

A Somerville lodging house love triangle, with two middle-aged women competing for the love of the star boarder, a navy recruiting officer, became known today when the woman who lost filed two suits for $10,000, charging alienation and breach of promise.

She is suing Jasper D. Akers, Fitchburg recruiting officer, for breach of promise, and she is suing her triumphant rival his present wife, Katherine G. Studley Akers, for alienation of affections. Akers is 36 and his wife 45.

Mrs. Shaughnessy claims she was engaged to Akers, who was boarding at her house, when the then Miss Studley also became a boarder, and that Miss Studley won him from her, even though her own trousseau was prepared.

Suit is filed in Worcester County because the Akers live in Fitchburg. It is the first case on record in the county where an alienation suit has been filed other than by a husband or a wife.

Edward P. Barry and Harold W. Sullivan, counsel for the Akers, in answer to the action, claim the plaintiff has not given sufficient facts to constitute an action.

HELD FOR TAKING GIRL'S RING IN RACKET

She claims to have been the victim of "the jobless ring racket." She is Anna O'Connor, 17, of Bunker Hill st., Charlestown, and gladly she gave up her ring to get a job in a hospital—that didn't exist. (Staff photos.)

SERGT. THOMAS F. READY — HAROLD ROLLINS

He promised a girl a job. He used her ring to get money for milk for his baby. That's the story around the arrest of Harold Rollins of Roxbury, shown with Sergt. Ready. Rollins promised Anna O'Connor a job. He took her ring as evidence of good faith. There was no job—no ring.

GOVERNOR GOES THERE AFTER WALSH VISIT

Surprises Troops by Arriving a Day Ahead of Time; Guns Roar Welcome for Him

Fort Devens, July 21—The Yankee Division, "pepped up" for Governor's Day, with its 30,000 visitors, awoke to a surprise today—finding Governor Ely already on hand.

It was their first meeting since the Chicago convention and Walsh said that he had proceeded during the conference on the assumption that the Governor would be a candidate for re-election.

GUEST OF SON

Having spent the night with his son, Richard, at the state staff quarters, Gov. Ely had breakfast with the officers and watched last-minute preparations for the big review.

Auto loads of visitors, many of them women and children, began arriving at an early hour.

Gov. Ely received a 17-gun salute fired by Battery A, 102d Field Artillery, at 11.15, the time originally set for his arrival in camp.

From the main gate a mounted escort from the 102d Field Artillery guided him to headquarters, with a composite war-strength company marching behind. Maj.-Gen. Ireland F. Fish, division commandant, received the Governor and an inspection followed.

TRIBUTE TO WILLIAMS

A feature of this year's big day at Devens is the unveiling by the Governor of a bronze plaque mounted on a three-ton natural cut boulder in tribute to Col. Frank P. Williams, former State surgeon-general, who died recently. The boulder is from Marblehead, where Col. Williams lived in summer.

A delegation of medical friends of the deceased is attending, and Mrs. Williams and her sons were also on hand for the unveiling.

The Governor's review of the 8000 troops of the division takes place at 4 p. m. with National Guard planes saluting overhead. Gov. Ely will remain for the boxing bouts.

LUMMUS WINS APPROVAL

Favorable comment was being made at the State House and in legal circles today regarding the nomination of Judge Henry T. Lummus of Lynn, Superior Court justice in Essex county, by Ely, to fill the vacancy caused by the death of Justice George A. Sanderson.

From the general sentiment regarding the nomination, it is believed there will be no dissenting voice when Judge Lummus' name is brought before the meeting of the executive council next Wednesday for confirmation.

The appointment of Judge Lummus was Governor Ely's choice to fill the position to which he nominated Prof. Felix Frankfurter of Harvard Law School, who declined.

CHILDREN WIN BATHING BEACH

More than 200 children splashed and bathed at Wedge Pond beach, Winchester, today having won their battle against the move of 33 residents of the exclusive section to have the beach closed.

The petition calling for the closing of the resort on the grounds it was a nuisance and decreasing property values was discussed by the park commissioner at Winchester, but was defeated.

One of the arguments against the beach, advanced by a minister, was that too much bathing is harmful and that children should not be allowed to indulge in it to excess.

BABY SAVES DAD FROM JAIL

Mrs. Harold Rollins of Crossing pl., Roxbury, with a nine-month-old baby in her arms, saved her husband from a six-month jail sentence today in municipal court.

Rollins, 32, had been convicted of larceny of a ring valued at $50 from Anna O'Connor, 17, of Bunker Hill st., Charlestown. He took her ring, promising a job which did not exist.

Judge Zotolli said six months in jail, and Rollins began an explanation of his own circumstances and his own vain hunt for work.

"You had more assistance than this young girl, and you were willing to transfer your hard luck to her," said the judge.

At this point, Mrs. Rollins, carrying her baby, stepped forward in the courtroom and said Rollins had been a good husband to her, but had been unfortunate.

"Well," said the judge, "if he has been decent to you, I'll suspend the sentence."

CURLEY SPEEDS ON JAIL BOAT

Mayor Curley was forced to commandeer a prison boat across Shirley gut in order to keep his engagement to attend the graduation exercises of 17 nurses at the Long Island Hospital.

The Mayor missed the city steamer which left the municipal wharf at 2:00 o'clock, as he was held until 4 at the meeting of Bay State Mayors at the Parker House.

Rather than disappoint the graduating class at the harbor institution, the Mayor drove to Point Shirley, where he commanded the prisoners to row him across the gut to Deer Island. There he boarded the steamer Hibbard and was taken over to Long Island in time to address the new graduates and their relatives and friends.

Bright Idea of Policeman Saves Cat—and Uniform

Nowhere in the police manual of rules and regulations does it say that a policeman shall patrol his beat in a sewer, but nevertheless "Genial Gene" Sullivan—one of seven Boston policemen who still blush—has a new kitty in his house at 3 Lothian rd., Brighton.

Patrolman Sullivan of Milk at station was patrolling at Franklin and Pearl sts. when a woman bundled up to him and demanded that he rescue a cat in a catch basin at the corner.

When you're like Sullivan you never refuse a woman—well, hardly ever—but when Gene had removed the heavy cover from the catch basin he was confronted with several varieties of slushy mud and scummy water, none of which is figured an aid to a neatly pressed uniform.

Sullivan sat down to figure this thing out, while the mewing of the kitty came from some niche in the catch basin that hid the feline. Meanwhile the fussy little woman kept insisting that Sullivan go down into the muck and mud and rescue the cat.

It came to "Genial Gene" all in a flash—just like snapping your fingers—that Boston has a sewer department.

An hour later it was all over, the fussy little woman was pacified, Patrolman Sullivan's uniform was saved and the kitty was on his way out to a new home and a new name—Tabby Sullivan.

Beacon Oil Workers on Annual Outing

Several hundred employes of the Colonial Beacon Oil Co. held their annual outing and dinner at Pemberton Inn, Hull, today. A baseball game, field and water events were followed by dinner at the Inn and there will be dancing tonight.

Ken Hall is general chairman of the outing committee and Flo Jaykin, secretary. The committee chairmen are Harry Burness, transportation; Dave Snyder, field events; Florence Rea, dinner and tickets; John Gerah, prizes and entertainment, and Jim Shannon, water sports.

SAFE-CRACKERS STEAL $800

Expert crackmen forced a second story window of the Wiggin Terminal lumber office, 416 Medford st., Charlestown, early today, used the company's tools to open the safe and took $800.

Police of City sq. station were notified and Sergt. Harold J. Mitten was assigned to investigate. Experts were also sent from headquarters to search for fingerprints.

John Tells Sondra of His First Marriage

What Has Gone Before

"Marry me before I go," Mark Merriman says to Sondra Kent, as he prepares to go away for years of work in the Congo. Sondra is more ready to agree than she ever has been before. She has determined not to marry Mark, because of his poverty, since she has been trained to make a wealthy marriage. She even has asked John Anderson to give Mark the position, but now she dreads the separation. The nearness of Mark's departure leads them to tell each other of their mutual love, and she finally marries Mark. After the ship sails, John takes her to lunch.

Now Read On—

SONDRA looked at Anderson beneath her lashes.

Her handsome face was a little grave—almost stern and he gave no answering smile as he met her eyes.

He mentioned a restaurant, and she said swiftly:

"Oh no, not there—" It was the one where she and Mark had dined the night before they were married.

"Where the noise will successfully put a stop to any attempt at conversation—is that what you mean?" he asked.

She flushed a little at the tone of his voice.

"Aren't you rather cross this morning, John?"

"Am I? I didn't sleep very well."

"A guilty conscience?" she asked lightly.

"Hardly that—I was thinking about you."

"About me?"

"Yes."

"What about me?" Sondra asked slowly.

"Thinking" is not the correct word. I had you on my mind somehow—"

SONDRA FELT WEARY

She felt a little uneasy; John had never allowed quite this personal element to steal into their conversation before.

"It was—" he agreed quietly. "I was wishing I had it in my power to do something to make you happier."

She turned her head sharply away.

"Have I ever said that I am not happy?"

"You have very expressive eyes, Sondra."

She said after a moment, "I don't believe anyone is ever really happy. I suppose we're not meant to be."

"I don't agree, but I think we all spoil our happiness by making mistakes which if we stopped to think, we should not make."

"That sounds very involved; have you ever made a mistake of that kind?"

"Once—years ago—when I married Evelyn."

"But . . . you were in love with her?"

"I thought I was, you mean—I found out the mistake the day she arrived in Africa to marry me."

"And then—I suppose it was too late?"

"I suppose so—or I was too cowardly to tell her the truth. At any rate, we married in haste and repented at leisure."

"That isn't always true," Sondra said quickly.

MARRY IN HASTE—

"What isn't always true?"

"Perhaps not. I am speaking of my own case."

She was silent for a moment, then she said almost resentfully:

"But that doesn't explain why you had me on your mind—last night."

"Like Case, I cannot explain, but the feeling about you was so—vivid, it would not have surprised

Jailed for Having Children Buy Dope

Benjamin Penta of Barton st., West End, who forges prescriptions for narcotics and sends any children he can find into stores to cash them, was sentenced to six months in jail today by Judge Zotolli in central court.

An alert pharmacist in a Boston store became suspicious of a prescription presented to him by a small boy. He notified the police narcotic squad and the boy took Officers Tocher and Sweeney to Penta.

Tots Bartlett Guided Through the Traffic Join in Legion Tribute in Mattapan

The children he loved and whom he guided safely four times daily through traffic that finally claimed his own life were sober-faced witnesses today at memorial services in Mattapan for Patrolman Frederick W. Bartlett of Mattapan station.

Patrolman Bartlett, who was fatally injured Dec. 9, 1930, while directing traffic at Washington st. and Gallivan blvd., was honored by his mates in Boston Police Post, American Legion, who dedicated the square at Gallivan blvd. and Morton st. in his name.

The exercises, attended by 150 members of the post, in Legion uniforms, by 50 uniformed members of the Veterans of Foreign Wars and by 20 policemen from the Mattapan station, were in charge of Sergt. Edward Kelly, commander of Police Post.

After a wreath was hung on the new sign bearing the patrolman's name, Commissioner Hultman delivered an eulogy.

350 GALLONS OF RUM CAPTURED IN REHOBOTH

State Patrolman Follows Nose to a Cottage; Indictments Loom in Liquor Probe

While the Federal grand jury was still listening to testimony about alcohol syndicates today, state police literally "nosed" into a still going full blast at Rehoboth, where it had evidently been in operation for several years.

The seizure included a 100-gallon still, with all the accessories, and seven 50-gallon drums of "cleaned" alcohol, ready for distribution.

FOLLOWS HIS NOSE.

The keen sense of smell of Patrolman Wilfred Sirois of the Rehoboth state police barracks led to the seizure, which was in a cottage entirely given over to the purification of denatured alcohol, on Wheeler st.

Sirois smelled alcohol and followed his nose to the house. Through the windows he saw a fire going in the furnace in the basement. A vat of denatured alcohol was on top.

OPERATORS SOUGHT

Reports at the Federal Building today indicate that the grand jury, which is hearing evidence uncovered by a special squad of agents under Joseph A. Tatro, will return a large number of indictments next week.

The object of the special squad was to smash the industrial alcohol syndicates which have been operating huge stills in Massachusetts for years, with only occasional raids by the regular prohibition unit.

Women Victims of Bogus Solicitors

The solicitors are asking $2 for cash subscriptions to a realty magazine and promise to give the address of a place where the husband can obtain work. They falsely represent themselves as coming from the Real Estate Exchange which has no solicitors for any publication. The jobs are imaginary.

MONAHAN BABY TO HAVE HOME

Was it because he was to lose his home?

Was it because he was without a job?

Was it because his baby was hungry?

No, his six-months-old son was no longer going to go without food. He will soon be adopted.

Two women have already asked to adopt Eugene Francis Monahan, the unemployed chauffeur's son.

Mrs. R. A. Goldsworthy of East st., East Weymouth, called the City Editor of the Boston American and expressed anxiousness to adopt the little tot.

Within a few minutes another call was received from Mrs. Grady Stutts, of Main st., Gloucester, asking if she might adopt him.

Eugene's dad has been out of work since the first of the year and is willing to make the sacrifice that the youngster might have "a good home."

TWO INJURED IN QUINCY CRASH

Two men narrowly escaped death or serious injury today when the car they were riding in on Independence ave., Braintree, near the Quincy line left the road, jumped a 10-foot embankment, and crashed into a stone wall.

Both men were rushed to the Quincy City Hospital where they were treated for cuts and bruises and held for observation.

They gave their names as Timothy E. Sullivan, of Washington st., Braintree, and T. F. Gillen, of Hudson st., Quincy. Sullivan was charged with drunkenness.

Officer Joseph Pangrave, of the Quincy police, heard the impact of the machine striking the wall. He said that when he arrived on the scene, both men were attempting to get away.

"Successful plays are interesting people saying interesting things," opines Lionel Barrymore, the famous actor who plays the sensational role of Jeff Keene in Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer's big political drama, "The Washington Masquerade." "That means that the playwright and the scenarist must be brilliant. The story must be told on the screen, which is the responsibility of the director. Everyone connected, from property man to producer, playwright, scenarist, director, camera man, electrician, cutter, and film editor—all have their part. All are important and to all must go the credit. No one man can take the bow for a talking picture success. A great picture takes everything."

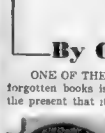
PLATO AND BENTHAM UTTER WISDOM ON DRINKING

By GILBERT SELDES



GILBERT SELDES

ONE OF THE GREAT (and infrequent) pleasures of reading forgotten books is to find in them something so appropriate to the present that it might have been written today, yet is all the more impressive because it was not made to fit. Any argument for or against Prohibition, for instance, which is made nowadays, is, in a sense, special pleading. But what Plato says about drinking has the air of eternity. It is good to feel, once in a while, that human history is not the record of separate generations, but a continued thing, that the men of the 15th century had thoughts and feelings like our own. I recall the thrill of pleasure in finding a passage in Gulliver's Travels which, in style and idea, was a precise parallel to a passage in Bernard Shaw. Now Mr. Adolph Ziegler provides me a condensation of Jeremy Bentham which seems most appropriate.

Laws and Morals

Ziegler says that to Bentham:

"The end of both legislation and morality is the greatest happiness of the greatest number. However, there is a difference between legislation and morality; the latter controls all the actions of a man throughout his life, whereas the former (legislation) cannot do so, and even if it could, should not exercise continual dictation over the conduct of men. So that while both have a common center of interest, their extent is different. The reason for this difference is that legislation can only affect conduct by means of punishment. These punishments are an evil which is counterbalanced by the good that they do. The punishment of a moral offense in many cases amuses more evil than good, and so it is wrong to inflict it.

"Bentham then gives a case to illustrate this point. Suppose, he says, a legislator wanted to extirpate drunkenness by direct law. First, he would have to set up a great many complicated laws. They would have to be severe to frighten the people away from this vice, since it is easy to conceal. The difficulty of getting proof would necessitate an army of spies. In other words, the evils resulting from these laws would more than offset the slight gain to be derived from them. The only thing the legislators can do is to impose some slight penalty on such an offense when it becomes excessive and allow popular sanction to arouse itself against it.

Foreseeing the Snoopers

"When we remember," continues Mr. Ziegler, "that at the time of Bentham there were no prohibition laws even thought of, we marvel at the foresight of this man, for notice how closely events in this country have followed the lines he set forth in his hypothetical case."

Mr. Ziegler quotes also from Walter Lippmann's Phantom Public, which was published before Prohibition was completely in working order. Lippmann's point reasserts Bentham's:

"When a rule is broken not occasionally, but very often, the rule is defective. It simply does not define the conduct which normally may be expected of men who live under it. It may sound noble. But it does not work. It does not adjust relations. It does not actually organize society."

Both these publicists imply a definite idea of what Law is. The real philosophical disagreement between the wets and the drys is not on the question of the goodness of drinking; it is on the question of how Laws are laid on the public conscience. The drys hold that Law can be imposed from above; that any Law promulgated has all the sanction it needs. The wets hold that Laws must correspond to the habits and instincts of the average man.

The Greatest Banquet

I did not mention Plato haphazardly. He knew drinking men; he knew drunkards; and he knew wise men. At the end of the Symposium, which is one of the noblest works of man, Alcibiades comes in with a group of roysterers and all the men who have been sitting about, drinking a little and talking much, fall to their cups. It is nearly dawn, but Socrates still has a great deal to say; yet he drinks one after the other under the table. It is a pretty picture.

"First of all Aristophanes dropped off, then when the day was already dawning, Agathon. Socrates, having laid them to sleep, rose to depart. . . . At the Lyceum he took a bath, and passed the day as usual. . . . In the evening he retired at his own home."

One would hardly call that debauchery.

But the aptest remark on drinking comes a little earlier. Alcibiades wants everyone to catch up with him, to get drunk quickly. And Eryximachus says:

"What is this, Alcibiades? Are we to have neither conversation nor singing over our cups; but simply to drink as if we were thirsty?"

Take a step through the centuries to

"Dost thou think because thou art virtuous there shall be no more cakes and ale?"

Gay Summer Activities Among Fashionables

THE HALSEY LODERS OF Manters Point, Plymouth, took a moonlight sail last night in their boat, the "Sou'wester." Now really what could be more lovely of a warm spring evening when the little fleet breezes of the sea are aflutter, when the moon is gilding the black velvet of the night waters with a luminous sheen than to hoist the feathered sail and with a delicious picnic supper aboard (in case the elixir of the beauty might not be enough for the demands of the human appetite), sail off into the bewitching quiet of the summer night! Yes, the Loders have the right idea! There aren't even any prohibition laws out at sea and that's a help these days. The depression and the mosquitoes ought to eat each other up like the gingham dog and the calico cat in the delightful poem of an (quiet).

WE ARE TOLD THAT Mr. and Mrs. Joshua Nickerson, who were married at Chatham on July 22, are enjoying a most delightful honeymoon in Paris. Lovely place we hear, but somehow rumors have reached our ears from time to time that it was the unmarried men who went to most abundantly enjoy the diversions that "Gay Paree" has to offer. But each to his own taste, Mrs. Nickerson was before her marriage Miss Barbara Whitehead of Boston and Chatham. Upon their return in the fall the couple are to live in their most attractive and delightful new home on the Head of the Bay" in Chatham

MRS. ROBERT ALMY (Rosamond Adie) is receiving congratulations on the birth of a son. That is splendid, another horseman to join the ranks of notable equestrians of whom both the mother and father of the young hopeful are outstanding examples

MR. JAMES GREW, BETTER known as Jimmy, son of Mr. and Mrs. Henry S Grew of Marlborough st., has just returned from three years of study in Paris, where he received from the Sorbonne his degree as a Doctor of Letters. He is writing a novel now, which will interest his Boston friends. His cousin is Mrs. Augustus Peabody, who was married just two weeks ago and is now in Europe on her honeymoon. Jimmy arrived back too late to attend her wedding

PETER HUNT, A RELATIVE of Leigh Hunt, the celebrated painter of 80 years ago, is also an artist, and has just given an interesting reception at his studio-home in Provincetown. He had amusing games planned for his guests, and the prize was the gift of his "Bar." The Philip Harveys of the "Old Mill," Sandwich, were the lucky winners; now it will be a feature of the Cape to stop at the Harveys and have your orangeade and other drinks made at the "Bar."

ONE OF THE PLEASURES of these summer days is the jolly fishing parties on board Rear Commodore Nathaniel F Ayers' yacht. He sails his craft along the Massachusetts shores, and invites his many friends to spend the day at sea, and indulge in the peaceful occupation of fishing. He has been off the Eastern Yacht Club, and also drops in on the Cohasset shore. Mr. Ayer is ex-commodore of the Eastern Yacht Club

THERE WILL BE MANY automobiles traveling towards Sharon about the end of August, taking their owners, and friends, to the Palfrey wedding. The little church at Sharon is so small that if all the prospective bridesisters attend as her bridesmaids, there will be no more room for others, except for one brother John G. ELIZABETH WELLS HAS now returned to her mother's summer place at Wianno from the Cape Cod Hospital, and no doubt Austin Osgood will be calling daily to enquire after the fair Elizabeth. We wouldn't be surprised to hear of an engagement in the near future.

Books—And a Number of Things

—By CHARLES HANSON TOWNE—

It is amazing to see how some fads remain with us. We are a nation of faddists; we follow, like sheep, the latest leader

Mahjong had its little hour, Ping-pong came and went and came again. Chess went out—it was too intellectual for the average person, no doubt; but there is a revival of it this year, I have noticed. The king of games, it used to be called.

The revival of backgammon is little short of astonishing. Many prefer it to contract; and one must have a backgammon set if one thinks of entertaining at all. Even the men's clubs have tables devoted to the game, and after luncheon able bodied men may be seen bent over the boards. It is preferred over contract for the simple reason that each player stands on his own and is not dependent on a partner for success or failure. Many a friendship has been broken because someone trumped his partner's ace in bridge. That, of course, could not occur in backgammon.

* * *

But I am thinking particularly of cross-word puzzles. Every newspaper in this broad land continues to run them, and in my commuting I have observed the most zealous in the smokers intent over their daily puzzle. The pencil that wrote down orders in the morning in the afternoon jots down the name of some vanished goddess. I watch the swiftness or the slowness of the process with interested eyes.

Whenever I have tried my hand at a cross-word puzzle, which is not often, I have been appalled at my ignorance. My mind, such as it is, becomes a blank in the presence of across, which contains nine spaces in which I must write the name of a Roman Catholic altar vessel used only in Ireland in the 7th century.

I always try to work systematically, beginning with 1 across, working my way legitimately to the next line. But I find I have to give up, nine times out of 10, and proceed to the middle of the diagram. With the same lack of success. It is very trying. I cannot think what hoax-froat is in four letters; and if someone is in the room with me, and I ask, I am always astonished at the rapid reply of the puzzle addict—generally a child of 15, who shouts out, "Rime of course, you old goose!" In a winking it looks so easy. "Why couldn't I have thought of that?" I say to myself, growing red in the face

* * *

I know ladies who begin their busy day by trying to solve these puzzles. I think of one who has made a list of all the gods and goddesses since time began; of all the abbreviations of French words, so frequently called for; of all names of famous generals in all the wars of the world. To these she opens and brazenly refers whenever she is stuck in the middle of a puzzle. One might think that she could have memorized these by this time; but she does not trust her treacherous memory.

It savors of cheating a bit to me, and about as futile as cheating at solitaire. However, she might remain at the game all morning if she did not practice these little deceptions; and if they make her happy, who am I to complain?

* * *

There must be an educational value in these puzzles; and it is the vogue nowadays to appear to have a plethora of general information. Hence the vogue of the questionnaire, at which again I am God's fool.

I fear I belong to that large class of train cross-word puzzle folk who leave them unfinish[ed] in their seats; and my conductor told me once, which heartened me considerably, that he had yet to discover one puzzle which had been completely solved. I was not more stupid than the average decent citizen then! I was a member of the brotherhood of the great unsolvers.

* * *

But what takes the starch completely out of me is to struggle over one of these fascinating puzzles for hours, filling in only a few lines up, and down, and then read that Miss Tilly von Schmaltz of the Bronx completed the whole diagram in three minutes and 14 seconds. And there is a picture of Miss von Schmaltz's triumphant and pert little face glaring out at me, and I begin to loathe this innocent prodigy

Who is she to give us cards and spades in this intellectual realm? A mere wisp of a girl, still in nigh school. I try to think that she is no more intellectual than a flagpole squatter; but I know only too well that I envy her facility in so rapidly setting down the correct words. How can she know so much, and how did she come to be so educated? Our school system must be improving.

Then I meet some aged pundit and ask him if he ever tries his hand at cross-word puzzles.

"Oh, yes," he replies, languidly, "But I am no good at them at a 1. Which convinces me that there is nothing intellectual at all in the solving of these riddles. Yet do go down in my heart I respect and admire Miss Tilly von Schmaltz. I mentally predict a great future for her. But I would like to think of her, the little minx, as marrying a hod-carrier and ending her days in Keokuk.

To retain a Christian heart one should abandon cross-word puzzles. Which is exactly what I have done.

me to be told one morning that something tragic had happened."

"To me?"

"To you."

Sondra laughed rather bitterly.

"And supposing it had?" she hazarded.

"We won't suppose anything so devastating. Will this do for lunch?"

"Yes."

She was glad to escape from him for a moment; there was something a little uncanny in their conversation when one remembered that parting an hour ago at the ship.

Was it wise to have kept their marriage a secret? And yet what else could they have done?

It would have made a great deal of difference to her life if she had gone back home and said to Flora, "I am married to Mark."

Flora would have been furious; would probably have seized upon it as an excuse to get rid of her.

WHAT WOULD SHE HAVE DONE?

"You've got a husband—let him keep you," she would have said something like that, Sondra knew, and then what would she have done?

In an aching imagination she saw again their bedroom in the quiet little hotel; Mark's watch on the dressing table—his hair brushes and her own side by side—her clothes and his, and perhaps it would never come again—perhaps that was all they were ever to know of happiness.

Anderson joined her and they went in to lunch.

"Will you choose?" he asked.

Sondra shook her head.

"No, you please—I'm not very hungry—" then she tried to laugh and cover the words, remembering what she had said a few moments ago, but Anderson made no comment.

It was early for lunch and the big room was almost empty.

Sondra's heart missed a beat and she sat up with sudden attention.—From "The Faithful Cheat."

"This is the place where I usually meet all the people I know and want to avoid," she said.

Anderson laughed.

"Well—Beatrice Taylor has just come in," he said.

SUDDEN ATTENTION

"Oh, has she?" Sondra's heart missed a beat, and she sat up with sudden attention.

She had not seen Beatrice for a week, and yet—she was supposed to have spent last night with her.

She half arose. "That's lucky—I want to speak to her—"

"She coming across to use now," Anderson said.

Sondra sat down again irresolutely; it would have been so easy to go on, and say a few rapid words to Beatrice—to put her on her guard. She felt that she hated Anderson because something in his eyes seemed to have compelled her to stay where she was.

Beatrice begins to talk tomorrow as though she has not seen Sondra for some time. What can Sondra do?

SKYSCRAPER

By Faith Baldwin

Lynn left Sarah's early, determined to ring up Tom. If he were at home she'd see him at once and get this straightened out, she said as she was leaving.

Sarah said nothing. She was already sorry she had spoken to Lynn. The last thing she wished to do was to cause trouble between Lynn and Tom.

Tom was not at home, but Hank was. Hank told her that Tom had been sent out to Long Island to learn the ropes at the U. B. C. station there. He'd be gone several days. "He tried to get you," Hank explained, "but no one answered at the apartment. He left for Jersey well. Best thing he ever did leaving the bank. He wasn't cut out for a J. P."

So Hank, too, thought Tom had "left."

As it happened, Lynn did not go home for vacation. Her mother wrote her there was an infantile paralysis epidemic in town, her father was driven day and night and they had decided it would be safe for her to return. "Perhaps," she wrote, "when it is all over we can take a trip to New York to see you."

So Lynn remained in town, enrolling for all the classes she could manage for the fall term and for a tail-end summer class before the regular session. She took her vacation literally in a classroom and during that time did not see Tom at all, his apprenticeship on Long Island lasting longer than he had expected. He telephoned her now and then and wrote her short, illegible, happy notes.

LYNN IS WORRIED

The fact that Jennie was leaving worried Lynn. Would she be able to swing the apartment alone? She thought not; not yet, at any rate. She spoke to Sarah, a little self-consciously.

"Jennie's leaving the apartment," she said, "I suppose I'll have to look for a room, or go to the club again."

"Where's Jennie going?" Sarah asked.

Lynn was vague. "I don't know; she's tired of housekeeping, I guess."

She said, after a moment:

"There's a little apartment on the ground floor in this building, just one room and bath. The tenant is sailing on October first for Europe. She told me that if she could rent it to someone reliable she would be willing to let it go for very little."

"Sarah, that sounds grand!"

"Have you a lease where you are?"

"No; just one of those month-to-month things. Gosh, I'd love it," said Lynn. "Could I see it some day?"

Having seen it, she told Jennie "It's just the sweetest, lovely cute. It's fitted up as a living room, you know, one of those disguised beds, and there's an electric-plate affair in something not as big as a clothes closet."

UNDER SARAH'S EYE

"Oh, she won't interfere with me."

"I'm not so sure," said Jennie. "Lynn, you haven't told Tom—anything?"

"Of course not! What do you think I am? Why?"

"I didn't think you had. But Slim's been getting all hot and bothered about me lately. I just won't see him, that's all," said Jennie, setting her jaw firmly. "I can't afford to. Suppose I get fed up with Jake, and Slim's handy." Lord knows what I'd do. And I don't want to do anything," she added ambiguously.

"Oh, but Jennie, if Slim should find out he wouldn't—I mean, you wouldn't have any more trouble with him."

"You mean? Well, you're all wet -that is, if you mean that Slim would cut me off his ealling list. He wouldn't naturally have decided his intentions any more, but—"

"Oh, Jennie, not Slim!"

"Why not? He's a man," said Jennie.

TOM ENTHUSIASTIC

Tom came back more enthusiastic over his work. But Lynn paid him scant attention. She came straight to the point.

"Tom," she said, "why didn't you tell me Mr. Norton let you out?"

He looked excessively uncomfortable. Of course he might have known she'd find out! Everyone knew he supposed.

He answered awkwardly. "Sean it was all so darned stupid. I didn't want to tell you. You see I walked into his office all set to tell him I was quitting—and then he sprang it at me. About firing me I mean. Lord you could have knocked me over with a—a cobweb!"

"But why did he fire you?"

"Oh, I wasn't responsible he said. I didn't take my obligations seriously."

Now was the time for her to say, "And didn't you?" Did you break your word to me, Tom Rawlson?" But she couldn't say it.

HE KISSED HER

Lynn said irrelevantly, "Oh, darling, I'm so glad to have you back; I've missed you so much. I wish," she said, low, "that they hadn't fired you."

He kissed her. So do I," he said cheerfully, "but if I'd said, 'I'm quitting anyway,' he couldn't have believed me."

"I suppose you know Bob Rawlson has your job?" she asked.

He looked so aghast that she knew he hadn't known since, then with relief that he hadn't been asked.

"Rawlson!" he exclaimed.

"Yes. Sarah told me that Mr. Norton had given him this chance as he was dissatisfied where he was. Tom, do you think that it was wise of Mr. Norton?"

"Wise?" He frowned, puzzled, then understanding, laughed. "Sure. Thinking of that lickass idea he—I mean, we had? Get it out of your funny little head, Rawlson's forgotten it long ago, I guess."

Then he doesn't know there's been talk on the Street, she thought. She decided not to tell him. After all, what was the use?

By the middle of October Jennie had moved to a Riverside Drive apartment, to her amused chagrin. "I held out for Park Avenue, or at least the East Side, but nothing doing. Still, it's a nice dump," she conceded carelessly, "and it has all the works, including a coffe colored maid who is probably the biggest gossip in Harlem." She added, "I don't suppose you'll come to see me."

"Why not?" asked Lynn, in her turn.

Tom, learning that Jennie had moved and Lynn was moving, was insistent in his demands for an explanation. "What's the big idea? I thought you two got along like house afire."

"We did, we do, but Jennie's had a raise," lied Lynn desperately, "and she's had a chance to go into a bigger place with—with someone else."

"Who?"

"Oh, just someone she used to know."

"Look here, what's wrong with you? Come, spill it; what's it all about?"

"Nothing. Whatever it is, it's Jennie's business," said Lynn, "and I haven't inquired into it."

Her force warned Tom that he was not to inquire, either, but his mind was busy with speculations. A tat with the frightened nun, not at all. But one day, reporting for work at noon, he saw Jennie leaving the building with a short, dark, dapper man and protecting herself against the slight autumnal chill by a three-skinned scarf of Russian sable.

"So that's it!" said Tom, staring as he told Lynn, when next he saw her, "I'm wise to Jennie's game. Look here, you'll have to cut her out."

Lynn said stubbornly, "I don't know what you're talking about."

"She isn't wearing sables and living on Riverside Drive—oh, Slim knows that much—on what she pulls down upstairs. Don't make me laugh, Tom—you can't afford to see, Lynn."

"Is that so? Well," said Lynn furiously, "you can't dictate to me about my friends. I'll see her as often as I want!"

Tom took his troubles to Sarah stopping in at her office one day Sarah listened patiently.

"I thought it was something of the kind. Don't antagonize her Tom," she advised slowly. "She's very loyal. No matter what Jennie does, she won't desert her. And you'll only make her angry. Let me talk to her, instead."

"You mustn't blame Tom," she concluded, after she had explained.

"I don't. Yes, I do! Men make me wild," said Lynn sinfully.

"I know your fond of Jennie Sarah told her gently, "but can't you see that she has cut herself off from all companionship with you by this step"

"No, she was honest with me about it from the very beginning. She was perfectly willing that I should, as you say, cut her off. She wanted me to, rather. But I won't. She's lonely, in a way. I—I don't go there when anyone else is there, Sarah," Lynn told her.

"I see. That's wise, of course."

Sarah was silent for a moment. What a rotten hypocrite I am, thought: what right have I to preach to Lynn about Jennie's morals? Even if it was all over years ago, it happened, didn't it?

There is caste in everything after all. No man kept me, she thought further, her chief thought. That was a free gift; this is a—business arrangement.

She said, aloud, "I'll not say any more, and I don't think Tom will. It's up to your own judgment, Lynn."

At a movie one evening Tom asked, dissatisfied "What's the big idea of lulling yourself?"

She answered, "It isn't settled yet, but if Sarah does change her position, I'm in line for hers, you know."

"Gee, that's great!" He said it sincerely, but his eyes flickered anxiously over her small face, a little pale, a little thin. "But you mustn't work too hard. You can't stand it." And then, because Sarah had talked to him, advising, warning, he said awkwardly, "You're not fretting about Jennie, are you?"

She said, "I suppose so, a little. It seems such a waste. I'm so sorry for her."

Tom said, gloomily, "So am I, in a way, but it's her own funeral. Slim's started to hang around her again. I'm worried about him, too."

The Marry--Go--Round; Women

By HELEN ROWLAND

MEN COMPLAIN that women are unreasonable. And some women ARE!

• • •

But what encouragement do women get to be reasonable? Who is it that gets all the petting and coddling, as well as all the jewels and spending money?

• • •

• • •

Is it the woman who never pouts or weeps or nags, who asks for only a new hat or a new car or a new slave bracelet, who never makes a fuss or goes into a tantrum?

• • •

Oh, yes, of COURSE, it is—NOT! That clear, reasonable woman is permitted to go right on being "reasonable and self-sacrificing," and wearing shabby clothes and five-and-ten jewelry just as long as she will, while little Mrs. Storm-and-Strife gets everything she frets for, including tender devotion. Everything and anything—to keep her QUIET!

• • •

• • •

I've never met that kind of "business girl," but doubtless there are lots of them. Why not? Did you ever see a man pick out the plain, unpowdered girl, who looks as though she might never have a date, in preference to the fluffy-haired, lipsticked cutie who applied for the job?

• • •

And do you see the men around a business office taking Miss Pauntless or Miss Superior out to lunch? Or taking them out with gratitude when she works after hours to get their letters off and their desks cleared up?

• • •

Men complain that the modern girl is not interested in plain, old-fashioned courtesies and a good, old-fashioned home. She wants a career; she wants excitement; she wants whoopee and limelight and all that sort of thing.

• • •

Yet I doubt that there is a normal-minded girl living who would not joyfully exchange an office desk for a blue-and-white kitchenette, a "shoppe" for a wedding ring and a job for a baby. "Woman's place is in the home"—and so is her heart. But what can she do if men "compromise" by offering her an automobile instead of a home, and a part-time affection instead of a life job?

• • •

Men complain that women spend too much time decorating the outside of their heads and too little cultivating the inside. But since when have men encouraged women to be intelligent? And what does it profit a girl to speak three or four languages when she can giggle in one and get twice the results?

• • •

The truth is that women are more reasonable, more efficient and more intelligent today than they ever have been. But some of them will be as frivolous, silly and capricious as men want them to me; and those are the ones that men will see, fall in love with—and then hold up to scorn as typical examples of the "selfish sex"!

CURRENT RADIO COMMENT

Broadcasting Bits in Brief

By N. P. T.

This Ray Perkins chap throws his hat, if any, in the political ring tonight—by radio only and as may well be imagined, just for fun.

• • •

Ray is building a big following with his humor (WEEI) at 7.30 these nights. He has some timely pertinent puns to pass out this evening, according to advance information of his program as planned.

• • •

TROUBLE AHEAD

If "Joe Palooka" followers read this they will be interested to known he is having a siege of heart trouble during his program tonight (WNAC) between 8.45 and 9 o'clock. No need for alarm, it's the romantic kind

• • •

Down in Newark, N. J., where WOR is the big works as far as radio stations go, they rediscel announcer identification to initials not long ago. Now it is found even that doesn't work very well, so the staff "mike" hounds go unnamed entirely hereafter.

• • •

Bert Lahr will not be heard on the cigarette hour (WEEI) or Saturday night at 10, last week having been his farewell air appearance.

• • •

NEW FEATURE

That one-act play, "Death Says It Isn't So," written by Haywood Broun, goes on the Columbia network this coming Sunday night from New York, being heard hereabouts through either WAAB or WNAC, if at all in New England.

• • •

• • •

Arthur Allen, of The Stebbins Boys team, heard via WBZ waves is responsible for the following: "Chickens coming home to roost may be true, but when will our dollar return to the fold?" Not bad, Arthur.

• • •

BUSINESS GALS

Myrt and Marge, those two gals off the air until autumn, are natives of Chicago. New York seems to have adopted them for a while, however, while they've been taking weighty business at CBS head quarters lately. Their return date and time will be ready for announcement shortly.

• • •

Listeners who thrill to wrestling descriptions as aired by Garry Harrison, should get a good 45 minutes' worth tonight. WNAC is featuring the Jack Washburn-Henri DeGlane tussle between 10.15 and 11 p. m. Affiliated stations of the Yankee Network also include the Braves Field affair, with Irwin Cowper assisting Harrison at ringside microphone. WNAC is providing it doesn't rain, of course.

On the Air

That Albany arch leader who's suing Paul Whiteman claims the title "King of Jazz," doesn't know how well off he is. Kings being what they are today, he should be happy he isn't one.

To prove that Whiteman is the Jazz King, Paul's lawyer says he has a yearly payroll of $5000. That shouldn't help the defense. No real-honest-to-goodness king ever eats $5000. It's clone pay it out in whisky.

Clark Gable and one of the networks are discussing a series with a perfume maker sponsoring the movie hero . . . Vin Richards, tenis star, and Willie and Eugene Howard will be on the WAAB Sun. eve. razor blade p'gram guess.

GIRL CALLS HER BOSS 'TOMMY'---MISS FAIRFAX

ust How Familiar Should She Become in Addressing Her Employer, She Asks

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I am 20, a stenographer to a man about 45—my father's age. He has a wife and four children. We are quite friendly in the office, and I have recently addressed him as "Tommy," instead of Mr. Tomlinson, following the example of the other girls in the office.

Through a slip of the tongue, other learned of this and I received a severe lecture. She said it was most improper on my part, and very disrespectful to my boss, particularly a man of his years. She asked me how it would sound to hear that father's secretary called him Mac (an abbreviation that men use with him). She claims that such familiarity on my part, if known to his wife, my boy friend, or the head boss would result in some embarrassment all around, and I would have no one to blame but myself. They could easily be informed by some girl in the office who has heard me and is friendly to either of us. Mother says a man will only go as far as a girl permits. I had not viewed it in this light and am now quite concerned. Anxiously yours, EDITH MAC.

Dear Edith: What you tell me, my dear, is in keeping with the present day manner of doing things, and I suppose it would be called "Victorian" in question modern wisdom. The boss is "Tommy," and no lines of distinction are drawn. There's a lot of talk about this being the better way; but is it, really?

Take your mother's generation. Then no girl known as "nice" would have thought of calling the boss "Tommy" any more than she would of calling King George "Georgie-Porgie." If she happened to make the social grade and curtsey at Buckingham Palace; or Mussolini "Mussy," if she were introduced to the premier of Italy.

The boss in the past generation was like the captain of a ship and you didn't get gay with him. What kind of office discipline can be maintained when you call the boss "Tommy" is puzzling.

And does the way of the present generation bring about more satisfying results? Formerly it wasn't true that one marriage to age went on the rocks and women were calmer, happier. But this business of calling the boss "Tommy"—that's a question of taste, isn't it?

She Wanted Her Freedom

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

May I ask your advice, too? I am 40 years old and have been married 10 years. The woman, my wife, I still love, but I have had to give her up because she didn't care for me. She loved not only one, but two other men. Nothing helped me to put her back on the good road. I would have forgiven her, but I tried in vain. She forced me to give her her freedom, and I got my divorce because she wanted it.

I am all alone now, without any relatives. I lost my job. I lost my house and had to sell my furniture, and here I am, down and out for 12 months and with my life ruined. Still I can't forget that woman. I met her twice since we parted and she loved me. Shall I suffer if I hope she'll come back to me, or must I fight my weakness? JACK.

Dear Jack: When you met she kissed you, which shows she was not wholly callous to your forbearance and disinterested affection for her. It's tragic that a man who cares so deeply for a woman should have had a better wife. Cruel, bitter, your experience, and I don't wonder that your hope and everything that made your world has crumbled. But at 40 don't talk of a ruined life. Your best years are probably before you, and the right woman may be waiting. As to your divorced wife coming back, very probably she will not come back unless things go badly for her. That type doesn't come back unless all other friendly doors are closed. Try to forget and look forward. The tide is bound to turn.

Afraid He Won't See Her

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX:

I was graduated in June from high school and know now that I'm in love with a girl who was in my class. At first I thought it was just infatuation, but now that school is over I can hardly stand the loneliness of not seeing her. I never invited her anywhere when we went to the old high; I don't even know if she likes me, and I've very little money to spend. I work for my aunt's garden and orchard for which she pays me $6 a week, and I pay $4 a week to my mother for board. Not a very cheerful earful, is it?

MATT McD.

Dear Matt—You're mistaken. It is a cheerful earful—very indeed. Any boy who has just been graduated from high school has even a small job lives home and is in love, has plenty to be thankful for. Don't wait till you're an old gentleman before you realize how splendid it is. If you haven't saved a couple of dollars just say to Mamma you'd like to borrow them till pay day. Ask the girl to the movies, and suggest you see each other sometimes. There's nothing for keeping a young man steady like knowing and respecting a nice girl, particularly the one he won. To school with. And go to the nearest public library and read up about gardens and orchards. Your six-week job may develop into something profitable.

Plenty Time For More Canning

By MARTHA LEE

"MY GRANGE has put up 42 jars of Strawberry Preserve, 30 jars of Cherry Preserve, 28 jars of Peas and 35 jars of Soup Stock, to be given away this fall to needy families," writes an enthusiastic member of our Home Helpers—our association for canning and preserving for the needy.

"There seems to be a difference of opinion on how to put up corn and I wonder if you wouldn't give us some recipes, and also suggest what we can do with tomatoes."—This from Mrs. T. S. E. from Weymouth. So we're losing no time to send along the recipes. In the face of such numbers, our modest canning efforts now tucked away in a cool, dark closet don't look quite so extensive as we thought, but there's lots of the summer left yet, and we've set a quota for ourselves that we are going to make or bust.

CREOLE CORN

Blanch and cut from the cob enough sweet corn to make two quarts. Wash and chop thin 2 qts. okra. Scald and peel 4 qts. of tomatoes and cut into small pieces, pressing out as many of the seeds as you thought. Chop fine 5 or 6 small onions and 8 green peppers from which the seeds have been carefully removed, then mix all the vegetables together, and add 8 tsps. of salt, 8 tsps. of sugar, 1 tsp. of pepper and the same quantity of paprika. Cook 30 minutes, stirring often, then pack in sterilized jars, adjust rubbers and covers loosely place in wash boiler, filled with hot water to within one inch of the tops of the jars, and process (boil) one hour and three-quarters.

MIXED VEGETABLES

Fill jars with layers of diced carrots, peas, string beans, lima beans, green pepper cut in small pieces, celery, and corn cut from the cob, previously cooking each vegetable 5 minutes in rapidly boiling water. To each pint jar add 1 tbsp. of sugar and 1 tsp. of salt. Fill with boiling water, and add 1 tbsp. of vinegar or lemon juice, adding rubbers and tops loosely, place in wash boiler, filled with hot water to within an inch of the tops of the jars, cover, and process (boil) for 3 hours.

CANNED TOMATOES

Carefully examine and cut away any soft spots in the tomatoes. Place in colander or in square of cheesecloth and dip in boiling water, then into cold. Peel and cut in pieces. Pack in sterilized quart jars, adding 2 tsps. of sugar and one of salt to each jar. Press down well and fill the jars to the brim, then loosely adjust rubbers and covers, place in wash boiler filled with hot water nearly up to tops of the jars, and process (boil) for 45 minutes. Tighten covers at once and invert while cooling.

SUCCOTASH

Wash and remove silk from the corn, and place in boiling water for 5 minutes. Then cut the corn from the cob with a sharp knife. Mix with an equal quantity of tender lima beans which have been cooked for 5 minutes in boiling water, pack in sterilized pint jars, adding to each jar 1 tsp. of salt and 1 tbsp. of sugar. Fill the jars with boiling water and adjust the rubber and covers loosely. Process (boil) for 3 hours in wash boiler, filled with hot water nearly up to the tops of the jars, or process one hour in pressure cooker.

Mirande Shows Dress and Coat to Match

SKETCHED IN PARIS

Dangers of High Blood Pressure

By DR. R. S. COPELAND

WORRY, fear and emotional excitement are among the common causes of high blood pressure, and during our present stormy times it is probable that an unusual number of persons suffer from it. There are many causes of high blood pressure, of course, but I regard emotional strain as one of the most important.

Dr. Copeland

In fection hardening of the arteries kidney disease, heart disease and certain infectious diseases are causes that can be controlled by medicines and treatment but emotional strain and excitement are difficult for the physician to treat. Only the sufferer can avoid and prevent emotional distress. Even with great care, it is difficult to, control unexpected emotional disturbances.

Overeating is another cause that the patient can control by his own efforts. A diet may be prescribed by your physician, but good as it may be in quality, it is worthless if too large quantities are consumed. Too much food brings extra flesh, and high blood pressure is more common in overweight individuals than those of normal weight.

Most persons who seek advice about their blood pressure are those who are overworked either mentally or physically. Where the brain is used extensively, the blood pressure rises the same as after severe physical exertion, and until there is rest and relaxation for the tired body or brain the pressure tends to remain high. If, in addition to severe mental or physical exertion, there is emotional strain, the blood pressure will be raised for a considerable length of time.

Persons with high blood pressure require rest and careful attention. All excitement and severe exertion should be avoided. Mental or physical fatigue is dangerous.

Daily True Story

The Only Way

THE THIRD TIME that Joe Randall was arrested for speeding the judge fined him $200, suspended his license for thirty days and then delivered an ultimatum.

"Young man," he said, "you'll either drive your car at the legal speed limit or you won't drive it at all. The next time you come before me for speeding or reckless driving you're going to jail and your license will be revoked."

The threat of the jail term was had enough but revocation of Joe's license would have meant the loss of his job. For he was a salesman and used his automobile to cover his territory.

"Now maybe you'll listen to me," Irene Barrett told Joe as they left the courthouse together. She had been riding with him when he had been arrested for speeding. "If I've warned you once I've warned you a hundred times about speeding."

JOE'S PROMISE

No more speeding, I promise," answered Joe. If he could have had his way Irene would have always ridden with him, but he had never been able to summon courage enough to ask her to marry him. She was the daughter of a wealthy father and he had only his salary as a sales man.

"How are you going to make out during the next 30 days without your automobile?" asked Irene.

"I can find about manage for that long," answered Joe. "I'll have to pass up some calls, but the others I can make by train or hiring a driver. This will cost me plenty and I mean what I said—no more speeding."

When the 30-day suspension period had passed and Joe could again drive he seemed to have learned his lesson. At all times he kept within the speed limit and frequently he grinned to himself whenever he saw a motorcycle policeman coming at speede.

But time undermines all good resolutions and, little by little Joe began stepping on it. He was careful to select open stretches of the road and kept a sharp lookout for motorcycle cop.

Then he bought a new car.

STEPS ON GAS

"It's really second hand," he explained to Irene in the first evening he asked her to go riding in it with him. "But it's as good as new. I got a bargain. A friend of mine wanted to sell in a hurry. Boy, can it eat up the road! It can do eighty-five easily."

"It won't do eighty-five while I'm in it," replied Irene. "Remember what you promised."

It was near twilight when they started out. At first Joe did a within the speed limit. Then, after passing the 1 burbs he began getting it out headless of Irene's warnings.

"Just this once," he said. "I want to show you what it can do."

The speedometer needle shot up to eighty and then Joe allowed it to drop back. He was making close to sixty miles an hour as he signaled to a car ahead which drew over and allowed him to shoot past. Then, as Joe continued to decrease his speed, the car behind quickly closed up, passed him, and its driver blew a police whistle.

A policeman in uniform got out of the other car and came back. "What's your name?" he asked Joe.

It was too late now. Joe realized that his job was gone and jail faced him. He gave his name, trying to keep his voice from trembling. He dared not look at Irene. Suddenly she spoke.

"Please, officer," she said. "Don't stop us. You'll ruin our lives if you do."

"What do you mean?" asked the officer.

"We're eloping," Irene answered. "We've just got time to be married and we're afraid we're being followed. Please don't stop us."

Joe could hardly believe what he heard. He dared not look at Irene. But the policeman did. Then he laughed.

"I've heard that before," he said, "I'll believe it when I see it. But that's an old gag. If you were really eloping now—"

"All right," interrupted Irene. "Just follow us. We can't get away and you've got the car number. Go to the next town with us and see."

Half an hour later Joe and Irene were married, with the policeman witnessing the ceremony. Joe went through it all in a half daze. Then they were ready to leave.

"It was the only way," said Irene. "I knew all along that you loved me. A woman always knows. Of course, I would rather have had you propose but I didn't have any other choice. I couldn't let you go to jail and lose your job."

"No you don't," said Irene. "I'll drive now. This is our honeymoon."

The Beauty Box

DIFFICULTIES confront the ashen blonde when she selects a frock or hat. Besides her problems those of the natural blonde or brunette are simple. She of the mouse colored locks can pin her hair, and hopes to navy blue and black; they are ever her best bets, especially if her complexion is fair. She should avoid white browns and greys. Beige is all right if it carries a pinkish caste. Lavender will set her off easily.

Etiquette of the Dance

By MRS. BEECKMAN

DEAR MISS BEECKMAN:

I have been going with a young man for a year and a half and very often go out with another couple, making it a foursome. When the gentleman of the other party asks me to dance, what should he say to the young man I am with, if anything?

With a foursome of this kind it would not be necessary for the other gentleman to ask the permission of your escort to dance with you.

Rule of Grammar

DEAR MRS. BEECKMAN:

In this sentence, "If I were her (or she) I would say this to him. Which word, her or she, is correct, and will you tell me the grammatical reason?

Thanking you for the many times you have assisted our club with correct manners and proper English. A. M.

In this sentence, "she" is correct after "were." A good rule to remember about this—and an easy one—is that after any part of the verb "to be," we use the same case that is used before it. That is, in your sentence "I" is, of course, in the nominative case, therefore, after the "were" we use "she," the nominative case.

POWER TRUST WINS IN FIRST COURT TEST

Norfolk, Va., July 21—Judge Way, in U. S. court, has refused to dismiss a suit by the Appalachian Electric Power Co. against the Federal Power Commission, aimed at the destruction of the national water power law. Thus the government suffered its second defeat on preliminaries in the record New River case.

In denying the motion for dismissal, Judge Way ruled that a power company on all except constitutional issues presented. He held that his court had jurisdiction that the suit was properly drawn and that findings of the commission are reviewable, not final and binding on the courts.

He proposed to proceed to trial on constitutional issues, which he stated as

Huston Thompson, special counsel for the commission said an appeal was likely on the issue of the court's jurisdiction.

Newton D. Baker, chief counsel for the power company, sweeping by assailed the constitutionality of the law, which, as Secretary of War a dozen years ago, he helped to frame and administer.

Arguing that the company should be released from regulation under this law, Baker branded its recapture provision a "constitutional monstrosity."

WAR ON TARIFF UPSETS PACT

London, July 21 (INS)—Bad weather is ahead for the good ship "Entente," constructed by England and France at the Lausanne conference and subsequently boarded by Italy and Belgium as first class passengers, according to information received by the International News Service today.

Closely following news that Italy and France, supposedly united through the Entente for the economic rehabitation of Europe, are going to indulge in a tariff war, France inaugurated the struggle by severely limiting the importations of certain Italian products which would hamper the French manufactures and by placing heavy duties on others.

ITALY IN DESPERATE SITUATION

That is for the economic side of the matter. There is still another phase, however—the diplomatic.

Benito Mussolini, Premier and dictator of Italy, has retired Dino Grandi from the Ministry of Foreign affairs in the Cabinet and taken that post himself.

In diplomatic circles today it was said that this action was taken by Mussolini because Grandi, in newspaper parlance, got "scooped" at Lausanne and the French and British created the entente before he had anyides that such a scheme was in the making.

GRANDI HAD TO GO

According to the story told here Il Duce wanted to be among the leaders in an entente and was quite unhappy when he found out about the new entente. Italy voted adherence to the entente, but ever since it took that action Mussolini has been anxious to get rid of Grandi.

Il Duce is said to believe that his young minister had the wool pulled over his eyes at Lausanne and that it would be safer for Italy henceforth to have only an observer at diplomatic gathering—an observer who would report to Rome and act only on orders, not on his own initiative

"Money," said Mr. Babson, "will no more succeed in getting us out of the depression than it succeeded in keeping us out. Nor does the solution lie in building more non-productive public works, but in getting the unemployed back to their old productive jobs.

"Organized relief," he said, "is benefitting the politician more than the distressed unemployed.

COACH MODELS WINNERS TO BE NAMED

Residents of Boston and vicinity have their final opportunity today and tonight to inspect the 150 miniature Napoleonic coach models that have been attracting crowds to the Massachusetts Institute of Technology Department of Architecture, Rogers Building, 491 Boylston st. The display of entries from Massachusetts in the $75,000 coach-building competition of the Boston Evening American and the Fisher Body Craftsman's Guild, is scheduled to end tonight with the announcement of winners in three states.

The local display is one of 32 similar exhibits that the guild is holding, all over the United States and Canada, preliminary to the year's grand finals at Detroit next month.

At the close of the judging tomorrow two Massachusetts boys will be chosen to represent this state at the Guild convention in Detroit, where they will compete with corresponding winners from other states and from Canada for the greatly coveted international awards.

There are four in number, and are identical. Each entitles its winner to four years in the university of his own selection.

State awards, in addition to the trips include four purses of $100 in gold, eight of $25 and eight of 15. Besides this, the Boston Evening American will present a handsome silver loving cup to the boy in its chapter whose model the judges have rated highest of all. The cup will be engraved with the winner's name, and will remain his permanently.

RATE TO BE SET ON AID LOANS

Washington, July 21 (AP)—What the toll shall be for federal loans to states municipalities and private firms remains to be announced after President Hoover signs the $2,122,000,000 relief bill now on his desk.

The bill fixes the interest rate on loans to states from the $300,000,000 destitution fund at 3 per cent; it authorizes the Reconstruction Finance Corporation the charges on other advances.

Under the first relief bill, establishing the corporation, directors made loans to railroads at 6 per cent; those to banks 5½ per cent. There was nothing in the law to dictate what the levy would be on new borrowings for public works.

White House officials indicated that the President might be ready to sign his home loan bank bill as well as the relief measure.

"Package Sales" in Court for Decision

New York, July 21—Judge Black in Supreme court heard arguments in case of Richard Whitney & Co. Inc., versus Richard Whitney and New York Stock Exchange in suit to prevent sale of "package" of securities, in which the exchange recently forbade members to participate except under restrictions. Counsel for Whitney & Co. argued its business has been greatly damaged by exchange's refusal to let members deal with its clients and asked injunction to prevent effecting by the exchange of the order. Pitney, for the exchange, is seeking court award of $1,000,000 as punitive damages. Counsel for Stock Exchange argued it has a right to look to the best interests

1½ Bushels Oats for 20 Cigarettes

New York, July 21—With cash oats at Chicago selling for 18¾ cents a bushel, the lowest in 35 years, not return to farmer in the production belt ranges about 7 to 10 cents, and 10 cents. Since February, 1897, when spot oats brought only 15¾ cents in Chicago, have been on so low.

Oats have never, even in war times, brought spectacular prices comparable with wheat and corn—the top being 66¾ cents in October, 1918. Their present level is close to the 12-cent record low in April and July, 1861, on Chicago Board of Trade. It means the farmer going to town must offer 1¾ bushels to purchase a pack of cigarettes. Many farmers are storing oats in their bins rather than dispose of them at present unprofitable level.

WHEN MORGAN CRIED OVER A DIVIDEND

By B. C. FORBES

Mr. Morgan did.

The dividend was the one which is most exercising the financial world's mind at this moment, United States Steel Corp. preferred.

This stock has tumbled from a peak of above $150 to near $50, and is today selling to yield 12 per cent. Wall Street eagerly speculates as to whether the 7 per cent rate will be reduced. The full 7 per cent rate has been paid every year since the formation of the corporation at the opening of this century.

The late Henry Clay Frick, the coke king, who joined forces with Andrew Carnegie but finally had a vicious falling-out with him, told me of the Morgan incident.

Mr. Frick had been induced to become a U. S. Steel director at a time when things were going very badly. His first official act was to insist upon omitting the common stock dividend. That saving, however, was not wholly sufficient, he figured, to render financial disaster impossible.

Frick joined Morgan on the latter's yacht to convince him of the absolute necessity for ending the preferred payment. Frick propounded impressive reasons for the step he urged.

Finally, Morgan rose from the breakfast table, conducted Frick on deck, gazed towards New York's financial district, and tears welled up in his eyes. After a pause, the banker murmured brokenly

"If you reduce the dividend on that preferred stock, I could not face going downtown tomorrow."

Frick immediately capitulated. Recovery shortly set in and the preferred dividend ceased to be in jeopardy.

Dividend's Fate in Doubt Again

What will the Steel directors do when they meet next Tuesday to consider this same preferred dividend? Doubtless the present J. P. Morgan will be present. While infinitely less dominating than his father, he is perhaps the most influential of the corporation's directors. Will the voice as uncompromising objection as did his father to slashing the disbursement?

I don't know. All I know is that one of Mr. Morgan's intimates, a fellow director, lately told me, when the stock was close to 50, that he wished he had enough money to buy all the Steel preferred he would like to buy "around 50."

So, we shall see what we shall see.

The security markets are this week marking time, but they may be said to be marking time hopefully. Selling pressure has notably relaxed both in bonds and stocks.

Government or Enterprise in Business

This column's reference to one bank's advertised readiness to lend for home-building has brought from the Bank of America, San Francisco, a communication showing that its president, Will E. Morrish, announced at the beginning of last month:

"Beginning June 6, we will accept applications to aid people in the construction and ownership of small homes and to thus take advantage of the lowest building costs in 20 years . . . As these funds are loaned to build new homes the entire building industry will be helped and stimulated."

The truth is that a vast number of banks throughout the country are financially able to facilitate home-building. Why lean upon the government—upon taxpayers' money—for everything? Didn't bankers and other business men vociferously demand not so very long ago, "less government in business"?

What we need most of all is more enterprise in business.

B. C. Forbes

SPECTATOR

Says:

There is no question but that sentiment in Wall Street has changed materially for the better. This improvement reaches from powerful financiers down to the day-to-day traders. There is nothing concrete, of course, upon which to base this rising hope, excepting the indisputable record of vast deflation over a period of years.

Optimism Rising

There is the hope something will be done before election to stir the markets into a genuine recovery. All in all, the biggest speculators still look with intense disfavor on short-selling, except perhaps in a few of the "higher-priced" issues. The rank and file of stocks, however, are either losing ignored by the biggest operators or are winning gradual buying interest from them

To account for the reversal of the rule, the street welcomed a report that the American Securities Investing Corporation, the bankers' enterprise, had extended its buying operations into stocks. The story, however, lacked confirmation and probably is based principally on hope. The bankers' chief interest lies in the bond market, and here it has been confirmed they have been buyers. With bonds stabilized beyond doubt, the stock market probably will be able to take care of itself

Here and There

There was some informed buying in the bonds of Northwestern railroads due to the bumper crop situation in that region . . . If the crop prospects materialize, there will be a lot of grain to move even if prices fail to have a big rise . . . opinion still leans to the belief that there will be a strong effort to put grain prices up before election.

Strength in Union Pacific was understood to have been due to covering for the account of one of the recently publicized bears . . . Curiously enough, reports are current that the road may maintain its $6 dividend at next month's meeting. Directors will have to dip into the till some more to do this, for earnings so far this year have been plenty hurt.

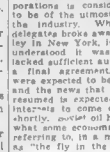
OIL PACT VERY IMPORTANT TO INDUSTRY

By FRANK H. MELOON

An amicable agreement by the delegates of the world's big oil corporations is considered by many to be of the utmost importance to the industry. When the Soviet delegates broke away from the parley in New York, it was generally understood it was because they lacked sufficient authority to enact a final agreement. Negotiations were expected to be resumed later and the news that they have been resumed is expected by important interests to come over the cables shortly. Soviet oil has been to date what some economists are fond of referring to, in a mixed metaphor as "the fly in the ointment.

* * *

Sir Henry Thornton, who will be officially "resigned" as president of the Canadian National Railways Aug. 1, is mentioned as a possible "czar" for the major railroads of America. Chairman Thomas Nelson Perkins of the Boston & Maine was first urged for such a position though at no time was it believed he would emulate the exploits of Will Hayes and Judge Landis.



Sir H. Thornton

Sir Henry Thornton, frequently in past years a contributor to the annual financial review numbers of the Boston Evening American, was in Boston only last month as the Commencement Day orator at Tech. His achievements in the carrier world have been large.

* * *

Sir Henry advised Tech students to do "orderly thinking." That would be good advice for many financial and business leaders not following it in recent months.

* * *

A Boston financial writer recently pointed out the heavy burden of the gasoline tax, constantly mounting, but it is in reality the least of a number of impositions the motorist has to bear. And a large number of motorists are off the roads this year because they can not bear these burdens, with consequent damage to the automotive industry toward which some economists have looked to lead us back to prosperity. Prosperity and bad times have never go hand in hand.

* * *

An automobilist in Massachusetts —fortunately only in Yankee Commonwealth—is forced to carry $5000 "personal injury" insurance. Dynamite users are required to carry only $1000. And sometimes a blast, as noted recently, does around $50,000 worth of alleged damage, something no automobile we ever heard of has done.

* * *

Accompanying the advance was the rumor that the recently formed $100,000,000 banking pool was buying some preferred stocks and a few common issues, too. This is serious, if the possibilities of the bond market seem only to have been scratched if an upturn is in the making. Rumors are often as thinly based as dreams, and this one may have had its foundation in the publicity suggestion of B. C. Forbes that a stock-buying pool could be profitably organized

Announcement published here yesterday that $100,000,000 new public utility financing is in prospect is followed today by reports that more than half will be for Insull operating companies, i. e. Commonwealth Edison Co., Public Service of Northern Illinois and Peoples Gas Light & Coke Co. New England Power Association financing is also expected.

—STATE ST.—

Hears:

A lot about a determined group that is inspiring a good deal of talk about higher prices. When their initial attempts to mark prices up failed to attract outside buying, it looked as though they were doomed to failure. Lack of selling, plus some sizable orders for rails, changed the picture, however, and they persist in trying for better levels.

Odds and Ends

For the present it is better to view the attempts of constructive from the sidelines. They are not supposed to ask too much this early in the game and it is most likely they will be satisfied to get the general list up to around 40, on the Dow Jones index, if volume selling does not interfere.

One more industry has taken steps to put the price of its product back at profit levels. Cement makers, in announcing a 10 per cent increase in prices, generated quite a bit of enthusiasm for their equity securities. Further purchases will await setbacks

Utilities, having held remarkably well in the face of bad news, are attracting some buyers. The position of utilities should not be misunderstood. Antagonism toward holding companies is spreading, due to admissions by conservatives that abuses of a serious nature exist.

Boardroom Briefs

Prospective buyers of utility shares should also remember that agitation for lower rates will increase rather than decrease from now on . . . There is no sound reason for accumulating in any of the various utility brackets . . . Profits in sugar shares are being accepted

With rumored earnings of $1.50 for the first half, which covers dividend requirements, the Air Reduction rate at the September meeting will be watched closely. Also the first quarter directors used 47 cents for depreciation and a further charge would mean a lower rate

Gillette is tipped from one end of State Street to the other . . . And the tipsters agree it is good for 23 at least . . . It looks like a question of the right direction but that time element . . . Still, it will naturally most, as a large estate is said to be getting out of stock.

Ticker Talk

When the market refused to break the Dow-Jones industrial index few realized that it was recognizing historical resistance points. The 1906 bear cycle culminated at just above 42 . . . United First, noted here as being bought at 13, is coming on the market.

There are reports of English buying in the rail section . . . London does not buy stocks, but point out that it is of small proportions

The sale continues in demand during the week, with Bethlehem, Phillips and Consolidated Oil the favorites . . . Oil company bonds are still cheap

The ability of Westinghouse to ignore a poor earnings statement is attributed to the manner in which the company controls expenses . . . One observer notes that even a small increase in business is likely to find the company wiping out the first half deficit. H. E. B.

IRREGULARITY IS DISPLAYED IN WALL ST.

New York, July 21—The stock market in Wall St. turned irregular today after a modest improvement in the early dealings. Pressure on leaders like American Can and American Telephone halted the upturn.

Losses were only fractional, however. Activity died down after heavier dealings in the first 15 minutes of trading.

OILS ARE FIRM

Oils were firm, aided by the progress of further curtailment efforts in this country and abroad.

Wall St. was in a cautious mood compared with yesterday's cheerfulness. The opening of the Ottawa conference was one certain-ing factor with traders waiting for some cue of the outcome due to this country's big trade stake in the British empire. Uncertainty still existed over the security of establishment of a dictatorship in Prussia.

The bond market continued its deliberate improvement, with German issues recovering from yesterday's sinking spell. There was little of new significance in commodities. Grains were steady and silver was better. Cotton and sugar were easy.

Speculative activity was noted in some of the low-priced issues like International Telephone and Rendix, which scored slight gains. Gillette was another to work higher under the impetus of reported pool manipulation.

RAIL ACTION CHEERS

The statement of the Railway Executives' Association, promising operating reforms and an end of waste, but demanding an equal opportunity with other forms of transportation, attracted wide interest in the financial district.

While there was some disappointment that no concrete plans were announced for effecting co-operative economies, it was understood that such action was definitely under way, and it was expected that its results would be apparent before the next session of Congress, when the carriers are expected to make a strong plea for legislation to place all forms of transportation on an equal basis.

While some quarters felt that Ottawa action threatened further cut in our foreign trade, already at the lowest level since prewar days, others were inclined to view that any action tending to restore prosperity abroad would in the long run help bring our export trade. At any rate, there was sufficient lack of unanimity of opinion on the subject yesterday to remove it as a market factor.

Grains Are Higher in Chicago Market

Chicago, July 21 (AP)—Despite lower temperatures on the week, grain prices averaged higher early today. Crop reports said the northwest no longer expected record bumper yields, but that a better than average crop was indicated. Opening unchanged to ¾ up, wheat started forward advanced. Corn started ¼-¾ higher and continued firm.

Close Is Uncertain in London Trading

London, July 21 (AP)—Trading today was quiet on the stock exchange. The recovery in German bonds, steadier transatlantic issues and the rise in oil shares on the reported agreement at the Paris conference were highly fortuitous. Otherwise prices drooped on profit-taking and closed uncertain.

COOK-COOS

Candidates are conserving energy by putting speeches on phonograph records. Radio stations then play the records, while the candidates rest at home and think.

That makes it nice. Instead of standing on records that are phony Congressmen can stand on records that are phonograph. (Laughter.)

Personally, we see no reason why the idea should not be carried to its logical conclusion.

Grrrrr!

'A turnip that we cannot stand
Is one who shakes you by the hand,
Asks how you've been and how you are
And if you've still that "Awful Car!"
Asks if you're still on Avon Street,
Remembers you take coffee sweet!
Asks for your brother Bill, and Sue,
The sister that resembles you!
Recalls your ev'ry fav'rite joke—
The brand of cigarettes you smoke!
Asks after your old flame, Tom Cotton,
And other errors you'd forgotten!
Then when you're just about to go
There's one more thing he'd like to know—
And asks, nor does he blush for shame,
"I can't recall,—WHAT IS your name?"
—Juanyta Clivette.

With the possible exception of the late David Belasco, no theatrical producer has had a career so dotted with outstanding successes and defeats as Florenz Ziegfeld, III of Los Angeles. From the time when as a boy of 19 he ran away from home to join Buffalo Bill's show to the present, when he tossed over his hospital cot delirious, his once sturdy body wracked with pain, Ziegfeld has always been a showman. Even when he became business manager of the conservative Chicago Musical College, his father's enterprise, he remained the showman. In 1892, he went to Europe to bring back military bands for the Chicago World's Fair. Impressed with the Hans Von Bulow Orchestra of 100 musicians, he brought it over under the direction of Frits Skiel and presented it at the First Regiment Armory in Chicago, which had been leased by prominent citizens for concerts during the World's Fair. Attendance, however, was slim; so Ziegfeld went to New York and hired Sandow (who wanted $1000 a week) on a percentage basis, spent $5000 on advertising and put the concerts over for sell-outs. With Sandow as his attraction, he traveled throughout the country, until the strong man's drawing powers waned. The theater was now in his blood. So he came to New York and produced something called "The Parlor Match," with Evans and Hoyt. It made money.

There was theater in Ziegfeld's soul—there was music in Ziegfeld's soul—there was love of beauty. Came then his idea of a musical hodge-podge which he called the "Follies" and gave to Manhattan in 1907.

Out of burlesque he took Leon Errol of the uncertain legs. Out of burlesque he took Fannie Brice of the heavy accents and the then turned down nose. What he paid Errol, I don't know. What he paid Fannie Brice was $75—and she thought it was terrific. Even then she played poker like a woman. And so, what was practically America's first revue, burst upon Manhattan's theatrical scene in 1907. Two years later he presented the first midnight cabaret, show at the "Frolic." It was at this "Frolic" that Will Rogers, rope and gum and drolleries, appeared first at a salary of $225 a week. Later, Ziegfeld was to pay him as high as $5000 a week.

Of the Ziegfeld stars, past and present, I needn't tell you. He first heard of Eddie Cantor, for instance, in Los Angeles. He sent for him and said in the typical Ziegfeld fashion, "Well, what can you do?"

But how he "knocked 'em dead," he was reluctant to reveal. He wouldn't rehearse—he wouldn't show a thing. He simply kept repeating, "Don't worry about me. I'll knock 'em dead. I sing 16 or 11 songs."

"With me," chirped Eddie. "It's rehearse when I get out in front of the audience." So Ziegfeld worried and Eddie went on his own way. Cantor was a loon, Flo had no doubt of that—but he decided to take the chance. Cantor went on—and knocked 'em dead just as he predicted.

This year, Ziegfeld has two shows running concurrently—"Hot-Cha" and the revived "Show Boat." But a few years back, he had as many as four operating at the same time.—"Annie Dear," "Follies," "Kid Boots" and "Louie the 14th."

There was the time he discovered James Watson Williams, and from then on Ziegfeld became a glorifier of stage settings, too. I'm not endeavoring to outline the career of the mannerly taking a few little highlights to give you a clue to his activities. There was, for instance, his romantic encounter with Billie Burke at a New Year's Eve costume ball, when he was dressed as a hobo, and his subsequent wooing of the vivacious young actress, with Grauman's Tomb at midnight as the trysting place. There was the time when he threatened he'd never produce another "Follies," and he almost kept his word—for a season. There are the personal idiosyncrasies of the fellow—his long-winded, expensive telegrams, his refusal to wear dress clothes at his openings despite his insistence that his audiences dress. His social "earnings"—his irritability with rivals who beat him occasionally in the selection of beauty and in the glamour of their products.

This is the man who lies desperately ill out West—thousands of miles away from the scenes of his greatest achievements. It is fitting that at his bedside should be the girl he wooed so romantically, Billie Burke—and ironical, that she should be no telegraph office within miles of the hospital.

Between Us:

To MRS. LUCY COTTON THOMAS: I pay tribute to the generosity of you in going to the aid of the ex-Follies girl mentioned in my column.

MEMORY TESTS PAY PROFITS

Vaudeville fans are having fun galore with the new contest the Boston Evening American is running daily, identifying the stars of famous RKO vaudevillite stars. And if their memory is good and they identify the stars correctly, they can share in the $100 in cash prizes.

This is the fourth day of the contest. Each day for two weeks the Boston Evening American will print three pictures of famous RKO vaudevillians with hints as to their identities . . . all you do is to fill in their names correctly, and neatly.

Prizes will be awarded weekly: the first prize each week being $25, second prize $15, and third prize $10. And that's not all—the next 25 threes will each receive a ticket to RKO Keith's Theater where a sterling seven-act bill of vaudeville is presented.

Save your entries until the end of the week and mail to Vaudeville Editor, Boston Evening American, 5 Winthrop Square, Boston. You entries must be postmarked no later than Monday midnight. In case of a tie, neatness will count, and the decision of the judges is to be regarded as final.

Today's pictures feature a boy dancer who leaped to fame overnight, a dazzling star in the Ziegfeld Follies; a musical comedy star who was starred in "The Little Racketeer" here last fall, and a favorite of the better known crooners. All these people are now being featured in RKO vaudeville.

The President Versus Congress

When Speaker Garner declares that the Seventy-Second Congress, during its long session just ended, "did not accomplish much for the good of the country," he puts the whole truth in a few words.

Every unemployed American will bear witness that Congress did not accomplish much for the relief of the unemployed.

Every racket-ridden community will bear witness that Congress did not accomplish much toward curbing the criminal organization with which prohibition has cursed the country.

By authorizing a five-billion-dollar prosperity loan to finance a national program of useful and much needed public works, Congress could have put millions of men to work and billions of dollars into immediate circulation.

By the adoption of an adequate sales tax, Congress could have reduced existing income taxes and released income to finance agriculture, commerce, and labor north, east, south and west.

This would have relieved the overburdened taxpayer, restored confidence, revived business, and provided ample revenue to run the government efficiently and, therefore, economically.

Congress could have modified the iniquitous Volstead law so as to permit the lawful sale of light wines and beer.

This would have revived industry, stimulated employment, added to the government's income, and gone far toward ending criminal racketeering, and restoring to every American citizen that personal liberty which the bill of rights was designed to protect.

Chiefly because Candidate Hoover was busily engaged in "playing politics" with human misery.

Mr. Hoover threatened to veto a prosperity loan for public works and he did veto the Garner relief bill even after the public works program had been cut to almost nothing in the effort to satisfy him.

Mr. Hoover flinched from recommending an adequate sales tax, which Congress would probably have adopted, if the President had supported the enlightened initiative of the House Committee on Ways and Means.

Mr. Hoover backed and filled and hemmed and hawed and timidly teetered and hesitated about the sales tax until after the insurgents in the House had rejected it and the radicals in the Senate had gained control of the situation. If the President had supported the enlightened initiative of the House Committee on Ways and Means, Congress would undoubtedly have adopted the sales tax, but the President was afraid that the Democratic Ways and Means Committee and the Democratic House would get some political prestige by passing the measure.

Mr. Hoover threatened to veto any modification of the iniquitous Volstead law, and threw the weight of his influence against any immediate relief from the organization of crime for which prohibition is to blame.

Congress could have accomplished much more for the good of the country than stands to its credit at the last session. But Congress could not have supplied that fearless and progressive leadership so conspicuous by its absence from the White House.

For, as Calvin Coolidge has truly said:

Another 'Boston Tea Party'

Alexandria Bay, N. Y., Revolts Against King Prohibition

"For the second time in two days prohibition officers from Syracuse raided village in spectacular manner, first time spoiling Spanish War Veterans' convention here, and causing riot. The raids carried out in the most brutal fashion, doors being burst down without cause, furniture broken, two people knocked down and seriously injured, and violence provoked by officers.

"Serious situation resulting in possible death and bloodshed will result inside of forty-eight hours if something is not done."

1—A woman was run down by an agent's car.

2—A river captain was struck by another agent's car.

3—A child was cut on the head by a stone thrown in the scuffle between the Federal men and civilians.

But, as the prohibition enforcers FORGET, this country is NOT Russia and they are NOT czars.

The wholesale coercion of an orderly American town by these dry law Cossacks cannot be tolerated and will not be.

If there ever is another revolution in this country, it will be because of acts like those committed at Alexandria Bay.

The citizens of that town were justified in taking the law into their own hands.

They have lived up to the American tradition of refusing to submit to tyranny, no matter whence it comes.

They have set an example, like the men of the Boston Tea Party, that all who believe in American institutions and American liberty will applaud.

Our people are slow to anger. They are not easily aroused. But when their wrath is stirred in a righteous cause, they do not deal gently with those who have stirred it.

New York Day by Day

The Old Palace

NEW YORK, July 21—There was a sharp wrench for old-time vaudevillians in seeing The Palace put out a sidewalk ticket cage and "go grind" several months ago. For years a sincerity swept across its footlights. Actors gave their best. It was their earthly paradise.

In many ways The Palace was the keystone of theatrical life. All sorts of players were drawn to the open forum of its 7th avenue and 47th street corner. It was the haven of the lay-off, the curb comedian, the song plugger and booking agent. Much of the nation's slang came from there.

There was a personality about The Palace expressed only in such theaters as the Empire and New Amsterdam. Elmer E. Rogers, like all managers, seldom romanticized, guided its destinies from the opening until it became a continuous four-a-day. "Clicking" at the Palace meant a country-wide tour.

In flourishing days, it had the most gifted theatrical press agent of the time—the late Walter Kingsley. He was trained in Englishry, a soldier of fortune and a collector of art.

A master of ceremony singled out notables for a bow—Jack Dempsey or maybe Miller Huggins, Charles M. Schwab or Gene Sarazen. Everybody went to The Palace. Such wits as Frank Fay, Jack Benny, Lou Holtz and Ted Healy, i. bright fixity of simper, made it jocund, preposterous. But always diverting.

The shortest street in town is Gay, in brief crescent down in The Village. It belies its name, for it is usually deserted and drab. O, yes, a Mr. Gloome lives there.

I am reliably told, the best-selling novelist of the last three years reads a chapter daily from the Bible for inspiration before going to work. The last half of Chapter XXX of Proverbs has inspired more writers than anything else save, perhaps, Genesis. Kipling quotes from Chapter XXX of Proverbs in 40 stories and poems. Michael Arlen's new novel is based on a Bible verse.

Manhattan's "Death Corner" has jumped from 23d street and Broadway far northward to 7th avenue and 42d street, where more people have been killed in a given time than at any other section. The most bewildering corner, to my notion, is at 42d street and 7th avenue. I always feel, in reaching the center, the word has gone out: "There he is!" And every motor car, truck and street car makes for me.

No description yet touches that of Kin Hubbard's in summing up New York's multiple tumult. Said he: "The only way to cross a New York street is to lead a cow."

But the best rebuke from the crossing cops came on a Pershing Square corner in Los Angeles six years ago. After a few false starts and frightened scurries back to the curb, he surveyed me calmly and inquired: "What are your plans?"

The secretary of a San Bernardino, Cal., lawyer perpetrated an unconscious truism in a letter just received. Her employer had dictated a line about gilt-edged bonds. Naively it was typewritten: "Guilt-edged bonds."

From a red cap at Grand Central, with a mile-wide grin, this afternoon, I inquired the condition of the world as it appeared through his rose-colored glass. "Well, sir, Cap'n, it's just 'ak always 'ceptin' it's been whittled down a little," he said, and no economist's high-blown treatise has expressed it so succinctly.

And Major Raymond Dickson came across a flop-eared ranch boy on the West Texas pampas, who had been short grazing thereabouts, and is a lad after my heart. After listening to a group of irreverent questioners of authority thresh out the perversities of the times, he meekly drawled: "It looks to me like it's about time for them to cut out all this relief stuff and give us a little help."

By Elsie Robinson

Don't Be a Rubber Stamp

HE CAN'T UNDERSTAND why he has lost his job. Hard times, of course. Lots of people out of work. But other fellows in his office have been kept on. Then why should he be let off?

Elsie Robinson

Some of those other fellows haven't been there half as long as he has. None of them has worked any harder than he has. They've grumbled about overtime. He hasn't grumbled. They've kicked at taking on extra responsibility. He hasn't kicked.

In fact, if he does say it himself, there hasn't been a more obliging fellow in the whole firm than himself. He has always done everything the boss wanted, and now this is the thanks he gets!

Yes, he's bitter, and he's honestly bewildered. Why should a man be fired after he's tried so hard to please? That's the answer.

HE HAS TRIED SO HARD TO PLEASE EVERYONE ELSE—TO THINK AS EVERYONE ELSE THINKS—THAT HE NO LONGER HAS ANY THOUGHTS OF HIS OWN. HE HAS BECOME A MAN WITHOUT INDIVIDUALITY OR INITIATIVE—JUST ANOTHER RUBBER STAMP.

Now, rubber stamp people are delightful to have around when times are easy and we can indulge in such pleasing frills. It's flattering to anyone's egotism to have a satellite who will always echo His Master's Voice. But when the pinch comes we want people who have voices of their own; who can create new ideas to meet new emergencies.

THE MAN WHO MEANS SOMETHING IN HIMSELF IS THE MAN WHO GETS THE JOB AND HOLDS IT SOONER OR LATER. THE PLEASING PARASITE GETS THE CAN.

We are all born UNCOMMON.

It may not be a spectacular power. It may merely be the knack for doing some simple thing well. But the simplest act has peculiar virtue and power if it is the product of our own initiative and imagination; and, on the other hand, the most elaborate act is meaningless if it lacks originality.

SO THE WORLD WANTS THE PERSON WHO MEANS SOMETHING IN HIMSELF, AND WHO HAS THE COURAGE TO EXPRESS THAT SOMETHING AND NOT MERELY APE OR ECHO SOME OTHER MAN.

Such a person won't fail in a pinch. His assets can't be taken from him. He carries them with him in his heart and his brain, and the whole weak, wobbly world leans on him.

Don't be a Rubber Stamp person. Don't try to duplicate some other person's thought or personality.

BE YOUR OWN KIND OF A PERSON.

Even if you're only a dish washer, use your own methods of dishwashing. Make your own decisions and your own plan. Put the copyright of your own spirit on every job you touch.

They may be ordinary jobs at first and the breaks may not come very fast.

AND THAT WORLD WILL STAND STEADY WHEN THE BIG WIND COMES AND BLOWS ALL THE COPY-CATS AND RUBBER STAMPS AND YES-MEN AWAY.

Just Folks

The Happy Toad

As I was walking down the road
I met an ugly, grinning toad,
Who squatted in the shade and said:
"I never wish that I were dead.
Wherever I may chance to stray
I find rich food along the way;
I have no dreams I can't fulfill;
I owe no other toad a bill;
In slimy places I abide,
But with them I am satisfied.
My little children I forsook
As tadpoles in a nearby brook;
I know not where they are nor care.
I have no burdens I must bear.
At night I never lie awake.
My bitterest enemy is the snake.
I have no taxes, no beliefs,
No cares, ambitions, hopes or griefs;
No clothes to buy, no cash to lose,
No tools that I must learn to use.
I sing no dirges, tell no jokes.
Contented, placid, happy I Shall be until the day I die."

Yet, as I trudged along the road,
I thought, "Who wants to be a toad?"

Americans in the New Foreign Legion

By Claude G. Bowers

Author of "The Struggle for Democracy in America," "Founders of the Republic," "Jefferson and Democracy," "The Tragic Era" and other important works, now writing for the Boston Evening American.

THE AMERICAN ADVOCATES of the plan for the transfer of the debts of the fourteen European nations that owe us from the debtors to the taxpayers of America are much wrought up over the indisposition of Americans to fall into the trap so carefully prepared at Lausanne. One distinguished American writes the New York Times from London to say that it is perfectly absurd to contend that if the debtor nations do not pay the debts the taxpayers of the creditor nation must.

That is an amazing statement.

America did not get the money loaned to these nations after the war out of the air. This money came from the pockets of Americans who got the bonds of this country in return. These bonds are a promise to pay. Every bond must, and will, be redeemed. And if the debtor nations who got and used the money do not pay what they owe, the American Government will have to tax Americans to get the money to redeem the bonds.

Another American Champion

Another American champion of the transfer of the debts to American taxpayers says that the debtor nations got $9,000,000,000 from America in loans. He says $2,500,000,000 has been paid. That means that $6,500,000,000 that was borrowed by the United States to make the loans to Europe is unpaid.

But he says it is not proposed to cancel this $6,500,000,000, but merely to arrange a friendly settlement—say a lump sum of $1,000,000,000 in satisfaction of the whole!

This would leave $5,500,000,000 wiped out as far as repayment by the debtors that got and used the money is concerned.

And the $5,500,000,000 was borrowed by our Government and must be paid by us to the people who loaned us the money. If the nations that got and used it will not pay it back, there is just one way for our Government to meet its obligation if it does not wish to follow the fashion and repudiate the debt—and that is to add $5,500,000,000 to the taxes of Americans to get the money.

It is sheer dishonesty to attempt to persuade the American people that the plan of the debtor nations does not mean an enormous increase in the taxation of Americans.

Our Internationalists Were Shocked to Tears!

Somehow we seem to remember that during the last year it was proposed to raise $5,000,000,000 through a bond issue to create jobs for the millions of breadwinners here, who, with their families, approximating more than thirty million men, women and children, are in actual want. This was to be done through a great public works program. It would have put a vast army of the jobless back into the purchasing class; and this would have helped the merchants who need help; and this would have increased the orders of the factories who need orders, and put more men to work in the factories.

What! Spend $5,000,000,000 to put to work Americans who are desperately in need, living barely on charity, while their children are slowly dying from starvation. Monstrous! How "unsound"! How "absurd"! How "impossible"!

But for the benefit of Europeans it is sound and reasonable and possible to raise $5,500,000,000 through the taxation of this America, which is in a worse condition than any country except Germany that has been outrageously milked, not by us, in the spirit of greed and hate.

* * *

We can raise this $5,500,000,000 by increasing the taxes of our own people without ruining America, but fourteen nations cannot raise it without destroying Europe. It is a story for the marines.

An Unbearable Burden on Our People

It is not an easy thing, even with the most practiced sophistry, to argue the American people into the conviction that they owe the debts of Europe. Mr. Hearst has said that if we take over the debts of these fourteen nations it would be an unbearable burden on our people. Whereupon one of the American champions of the European point of view scouts the idea as something "no rational person can believe." And he figures it out that if we pay the debts of these fourteen nations it will only cost each American $2.50 a year.

Well, if it is as easy as all that for us, how is it going to ruin Europe to pay so little?

And if we loaned the money and the others borrowed it and used it for their own benefit why should we pay even a cent?

And if it is to cost us so little to pay the $5,500,000,000, given as the amount, why did these same exponents of the European point of view think it was going to ruin America to spend half a billion less to put to work the millions of Americans who are in distress?

They Milked Germany Dry

But we are invited to put aside our point of view—which is the point of view in private business—and to accept the debtor nations' point of view. Try that on your private creditor. Try it on the international banker from whom you have borrowed money. But make sure before you make the suggestion that there is a quick passage to the door.

And the debtor nations' point of view? That war debts are not obligations, at all. That is something to remember in the future when you are asked to buy bonds that your money may be loaned to other nations at war.

But the answer is that the war debts have been "forgiven." The money that is due us and which we are asked to get from our own people is the money borrowed after the armistice. It was spent on the rehabilitation of these nations. We need and could use that money now on the rehabilitation of America.

The plain, unvarnished truth is that we are asked to take over and pay off the debts of the Allies; to assume the financial burden of the war. The debtor nations took Germany's colonies, her merchantships and every penny they could extract. They milked her dry. And we took nothing. They got all they were entitled to from a conquered nation; they pounced upon her savagely. And now that they can get no more from the enemy it is proposed to collect from us.
